The Easter Seal agency has announced that construction of a new children's hospital school in Eugene will begin May 1. The building, replacing temporary quarters of the school, will cost $150,000 when completed. Architect Percy Bentley's sketch of the new structure is shown here.

EUGENE, Ore., April 13 — A new children's hospital school building, to cost approximately $150,000 when completed, will rise in the south Willamette district of Eugene, officials of the Easter Seal agency announced Tuesday.

The new building will replace the temporary quarters the hospital school has used for the past two years at 1166 Alder Street in Eugene.

Howard Feast, executive director of the Easter Seal agency, said construction will get under way about May 1 and that the building will be occupied in the early fall. Percy D. Bentley of Eugene is the architect and K. K. Folgedalen of Eugene, the supervisor of construction.

The hospital school, opened more than two years ago by the Easter Seal agency to provide special education and treatment for crippled children of school and pre-school age, has a waiting list of approximately 150 youngsters at the present time, Feast stated.

Feast said the new building would accommodate a maximum of 65 student-patients as compared with the 30-student capacity of the old quarters. It is hoped that in the near future the accommodations can be expanded even more, Feast said.

Funds sufficient to start construction are already on hand, Feast explained, but additional funds are in the process of being raised by an interested group in Eugene. The Easter Seal agency will provide the administration trained therapists to staff the school.

The building will be located on a six-acre tract on Donald street, between 34 and 37th avenues, and will cover approximately 4,000 square feet. It will be a single story structure of frame and masonry.

There will be considerable window space, plus a 10x45-foot glassed-in play area and a series of classrooms and therapy treatment rooms. Dormitory facilities are planned as an addition in the future.

"We will have one of the finest hospital schools of its kind in the country when completed," Feast said. "There is certainly a real need for such a facility in the state of Oregon."

The hospital school is open to children from throughout the state.
