Jackman Says Buck Worth Something In South America

If you've been looking for that country to visit where a dollar will still buy 100 cents worth of value and then some—try Chile. E. R. Jackman, O. S. C. extension farm crops specialist for the past 26 years, and his wife have recently returned from the South American country. Speaking of dollar values, he says what is known as the "poorman's beefsteak" comes served with a chit for 40 cents. The dish, the specialist relates, is a filet mignon measuring three inches through and four inches in diameter. It is served smothered with French fries and onions with two soft fried eggs on top.

It is called a "poorman's beefsteak" because it is served on a single dinner plate. Chileans, accustomed to more ceremony at the table, expect to pay more when their restaurant meals come served with the customary five courses. Jackman said, however, that he ate a good many "less fancy" meals where the tab was 20 cents—five courses and all.

On four months sabbatical leave from his O. S. C. duties, Jackman and his wife visited a married daughter who with her husband is teaching in Santiago, the Chilean capital.

Most of the agricultural lands are in large holdings and date back to Spanish land grants similar to those in California, Jackman says. Farm machinery on the ranches—called fundos—is in short supply and the beast of all work is the ox.

Wine grapes, rice, irrigated pasture and barley are the principal crops. And, the most widely used irrigated pasture mix is orchard grass and red clover. Near the equator where great nitrate deposits are located, the annual rainfall is absolutely nil, while in that portion of the country near Cape Horn, the annual rainfall is 300 inches.

Although only four and one-half million persons live there, Chile, if one end of it were stretched north from San Diego, would reach northern Alaska. Copper and nitrate are the two principal exports, said Jackman, and despite the fact some of the farm land has been farmed for 400 years little of the nitrate is used at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Estberg motored to Portland Sunday on a short business trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Marlowe Needham and her father, Frank Frates, motored to The Dalles Saturday where they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Austin.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Hall and Mrs. Carl Schultz of San Jose, Calif. were guests last week of Mrs. Ethel Zeimantz and Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Chaffee. Another recent visitor to the Chaffee home was Mrs. Eva Scott of Spokane. Mrs. Scott accompanied the Chaffees as far as Spokane on their trip to Colville recently.

Mr. and Mrs. John Simpson and two daughters have returned to their home in Santa Barbara, Calif. after spending a week here with her sister, Mrs. C. H. Privett and family.

J. C. Owens is in Vancouver, Wash. for a brief visit with his daughter, Mrs. Bessie Herrington.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hams of Rood Canyon district were transacting business in Heppner.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Perry and Jim Morgan were over from Ione

Rock Monday. Mrs. George Peck and Mrs. Newt O'Hara of Lexington were transacting business in Heppner Tuesday.

PLAN NEW HIGHWAYS

On-the-spot information on proposed routes for new highways and the examination of existing roads and highways are the principal objectives of a six-day tour being made this week in eastern and central Oregon by state highway commissioners.

Members of the commission making the tour are Ben R. Chandler, chairman, Charles H. Reynolds and M. K. McIver. Several highway department engineers and officials of the federal roads bureau will accompany the commissioners.

America's total highway deficiencies—on state highway systems, in urban areas and on county and township roads—have been documented by a Congressional committee at over $41 billion. Additional deficiencies—caused by greater traffic volumes, higher speeds and wearing out of existing highways—are accumulating at the rate of $1.4 billion each year. If the nation's highway network is to be brought up to 1950's needs within the next 10 years, annual expenditures of $5½ billion are needed. We are spending only $1½ billion yearly now.
