There are 2,253 soil conservation districts in the continental

United States encompassing 839,551,600 acres of land in farms and ranches. More than 4,712,000 farms are in these districts, or about 73 per cent of all the land and 80 percent of all the farms in the United States. All of Morrow county is now included in the Boardman and Heppner soil conservation districts.

An interesting program for the 55th annual convention of the Oregon Wool Growers association has been arranged, meeting at Portland November 1, 2, and 3.

Recent rains have resulted in increased pocket gopher activity in many fields on our creek land in Morrow county. This calls for some action with a little poison bait to get rid of these pests. Alkaloid strychnine is the poison to use. It should be dusted on carrot strips cut about three inches long, about one-half inch in diameter. Dust these strips thoroughly. Apples can be used in place of carrots if desired.

A probe, made of a half-inch pipe, sharpened on one end, with a cross piece about 12 inches above this point to step on is used in finding the main runway of the gopher. When you find the runway, it is easy by probing close to a fresh mound made by the gopher, drop in a few pieces of carrot, cover up the opening.

You'll soon know whether you are doing any good when and if you do not find any new mounds.

Experiments carried out by the Pendleton branch experiment station since 1941 show some interesting results in average yield in pounds per acre of representative varieties of wheat, barley and oats.

GET STARTED ON CATTLE LICE CONTROL

Cattle lice are among our most common insect pests here in Morrow county, states N. C. Anderson, county agent. Few herds of beef or dairy animals are free of these parasites. Cattle lice become most abundant and their damage the greatest during the winter months. In Oregon we have three species of sucking lice and one species of biting lice on cattle. The sucking lice, as the name implies, feed by sucking blood from their host. The biting lice feed on skin particles and set up intense irritation. Infested animals become weakened and unthrifty and in feed lots will not put on the best gain.

Cattle lice may be controlled readily by dipping or spraying or in the case of a few animals, by hand dusting. Spraying with high pressure sprayers has been one of the most popular treatment methods. Efficient control can be obtained by this manner of treating. All parts of the animal should be thoroughly wetted. Low pressure sprayers such as those used in weed control may be used if the high pressure is not available, but using one of these, more time and care in application will be required.

The best time to treat is during the fall months—October and November. The lice are fewer in row county farmers led the yields with 2771 pounds per acre produced. Carleton oats was second, with 2617 pounds per acre. Elgin wheat fourth, 2593 pounds, Rex wheat fifth, 2429 pounds.

Farmers who are substituting some grain for wheat on allotment acres will do well to consider raising Flynn 37 barley from the standpoint of yield per acre.

number at this time, the hair is not so thick and there is better penetration of the insecticide, and weather conditions are not likely to be severe. The object should be to treat early to avoid heavy build-up of lice during the critical winter months.

Hooked And Braided Rugs To Be Extension Leaders' Projects

Techniques in making hooked and braided rugs will be subjects studied by project leaders of Morrow county at a two-day session to be held at the Methodist church in Heppner November 1 and 2, beginning at 10 a. m. each day. Mrs. Myrtle Carter, home furnishings specialist will conduct the meetings.

Hooked rug technique will be demonstrated by Mrs. Carter the first day while braided rug technique will be the November 2 subject.

Mrs. A. D. McMurdo returned last week from Grants Pass where she had a pleasant little visit with her Scott who is located there now. She went that far with another son, Dr. Bernard McMurdo, who had been at the home of his parents for a visit. Mrs. McMurdo stopped in Portland before coming on home.

Mrs. Sophrona Thompson is spending a few days in Walla Walla with Mr. and Mrs. James Webb and family.

Tom Michos, Portland restaurant man and ranch owner in Morrow county, is spending a few days in Heppner on business.
