Looks Like Big Tourist Year

Despite the war clouds and the curtailment of rubber, there are signs aplenty pointing to a big tourist business in Oregon this year. People must have a change of scenery and they must have vacations. And where will they find a greater variety of scenery and climatic conditions with which to make the ideal vacation than this grand old state of ours?

The travel information department of the Oregon State Highway commission has just released the information that this will be a banner year for tourist business in Oregon if inquiries about the state are any indication. Inquiries about all parts of the state and about all kinds of recreation and accommodations are pouring into the office every day as workers try to keep up with the pre-season rush. People from all over the United States and many foreign countries write to ask about beaches, mountain resorts, fishing, highways and special events.

Unfortunately, this portion of Oregon known as Morrow county, is not prepared to cash in on its natural resources as related to the tourist industry. To date, little has been done in providing campsites, although such a development is on the program of the forest service. There is no thought in the minds of forest officials for the establishment of lodges or resorts. Even if there were such thoughts there is no money with which to expand on such a scale.

Tourists nowadays do not as a rule carry camping equipment with them. Many, of course, are trailing their housing facilities right along with them and these people could readily be induced to visit our mountains if it were made known to them that camping facilities are available, although it is difficult to see how they would get along without electricity. This should not deter local interests from making an effort to attract some of the more than $100,000,000 annual income to the state this way. We can no longer keep the fishing, hunting and camping to ourselves what with thousands of motorists riding around over the country looking for recreation of this nature. The next best thing is to cash in on some of the business they bring.

The fact that the travel department of the highway commission opened over 6,000 inquiries about Oregon last week, with the largest single day's receipts showing 3,057 letters handled should be evidence enough to convince us of this section that we should make an effort to show some of these people what we have in Morrow county.

Lack of Religious And Moral Training

In his annual charge to the 41st convocation of laymen and clergy of the Eastern Oregon Missionary District of the Episcopal church held at Ontario Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Bishop Lane W. Barton called upon schools and churches to work together to remedy what he termed "the tragic lack of religious and moral training of our young people."

The Bishop defended American public schools against the charge of "Godlessness" by comparing their product to education provided under the domination of an ecclesiastical system, but went on to say that "few of us, including our educators, are satisfied with our public schools." He listed the faults of modern public education as "too much emphasis on physical culture... the blight of professionalism, of paid football and basketball players... too little emphasis given to sound grounding in the three R's. Progressive education has made a significant contribution, but it has gone too far... the time of our young people is so completely monopolized by our schools, even in after-school hours, that it is difficult for churches to plan their youth activities."

"Nevertheless" warned the Bishop, "when hysteria is rife, it behooves us to be reasonable in our criticism lest we throw out the baby with the bath water. It is well to remember that if the school system has not succeeded in producing a perfect citizen, neither has the church accomplished this miracle."

Since both the school and the church are interested in molding the character of our youthful citizens, it behooves them to get together on a program not on a basis that the one is more important than the other but rather that both are essential to the proper development of the child. Failure to recognize this necessity will eventually place our country on the same plane as the totalitarian nations, and thinking people do not want this to happen.
