Spokane Radio Tower Tallest in the West

Spokane radio station KHQ's new 826-foot tower — the tallest one in the West — is rapidly approaching completion of its skyward climb.

William J. "Bill" Gonyea, chief construction engineer, reported that workers have started installing the second set of permanent guys at the 600-foot mark. Gonyea added that the permanent guys give added assurance that the slender structure will withstand even the most violent windstorms. It was at the 600-foot mark (where the added support is being installed) that the previous tower collapsed while under construction in October, 1950.

Nimble-footed steeplejacks started work on the new tower July 30. The tower itself weighs 177,000 pounds, and with its cables and insulators the weight is increased to 400,000 pounds. Erection of the tower is being done in 20-foot sections which weigh three tons apiece. The tremendous weight of the structure will rest on a cone-shaped insulator measuring three feet in diameter. However, the entire load will be concentrated on a spot of about 20 square inches, or about the size of an ordinary saucer. This is safe because the insulator has been tested to withstand a weight of 1,800,000 pounds.

KHJ's president, Richard O. Dunning, said: "The tower's half-wave design will give Spokane the tallest tower in the West and one of the four tallest in the world. It is designed to bring KHQ listeners the utmost in constant signal strength in Central Washington, Oregon, Montana, and the outlying districts of Idaho."

Lester Nelson and Elmer West left last week for the east.

Mrs. Bertie Campbell of Connel, Washington and Dick Bonney of Union were visitors at the L. L. Howton home last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Pettyjohn and Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Pettyjohn spent last week at the coast.

Mrs. Fannie Griffith returned from Post Falls last week where she visited her sister, Mrs. Mary Cunningham. She visited at the Coulee dam. Her niece, Mrs. Charles Smith came home with her but returned the next day.

Mrs. Walter Linn and son, David, of Vernonia visited relatives here last week. She also visited a sister in Prosser, Washington.

Water Estimates For Major Crops Released at OSC

Steadily increasing emphasis on irrigation in Oregon has made efficient use of available irrigation water an important factor in the state's agricultural progress, according to the authors of a bulletin released for distribution this week by the Oregon State college experiment station.

Entitled "Irrigation Requirements", the new bulletin contains estimates of irrigation water requirements for 23 major crops grown in irrigated areas of the state. Authors are Fred M. Tilemeier for the soil conservation service, and John W. Wolfe, assistant agricultural engineer at OSC.

In the bulletin's forward, F. E. Price, OSC dean and director of agriculture, and George D. Clyde, chief of the division of irrigation and water conservation, soil conservation, point out that the practice of irrigating to raise crops has increased so much since the first settlers arrived in Oregon that there is not enough water to adequately serve the land available for irrigation.

As a result, considerable emphasis is being placed on more efficient use of available irrigation water. In order to use often leased to farmers to haul harvesters during the summer, during which time the "stop law" is not effective, confuses many motorists, the division explained.

When schools start, however, the law is in effect, and motorists must stop. Failure to do so, the division concluded, can result not only in arrest and a fine, but also could result in injury or death for some child. The law further requires that all vehicles must remain stopped as long as any children are leaving the bus or crossing the roadway.

Under Oregon law, motorists must stop when approaching or overtaking a school bus which is loading or unloading children. The fact that school buses are water efficiently, it is necessary to know how much water plants need, they declare.

Among crops for which the bulletin authors have estimated irrigation requirements are alfalfa, pole and bush beans, corn, grains, grass seed, hay, hops, legume seed, orchards, pastures, peas, potatoes, sugar beets and tomatoes.

Besides containing information of value to many farmers, the bulletin marks something of a milestone for the experiment station, in that it is station bulletin No. 500, the 500th bulletin published since the OSC experiment station was established some 64 years ago.

Heppner Man Called In August Draft

Kenneth Wesley Green, 21, of Heppner, has been called for induction into the armed forces on August 21 to fill the August quota of one selectee, it was announced by Local Board No. 31 headquarters at Condon.

There were no registrants sent to Portland Induction station for physical examinations during this month.

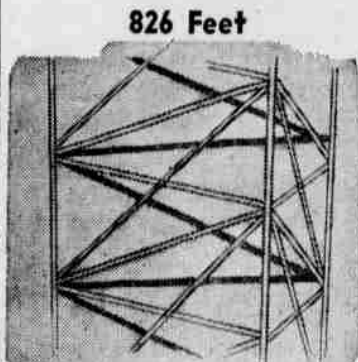

The term of service for all inductees has been extended from 21 to 24 months and any registrant between the ages of eighteen and twenty-six may now volunteer with the local board for immediate induction, according to Mrs. Florence L. Morgan, board clerk.

Under selective service law, all youths must register within five days of their eighteenth birthday and all registrants who have registered under the 1948 draft law must carry their draft cards at all times.
