"Jim," I said, "how much your house worth? Would you sell it for $10,000?"

"No," Jim rumbled. "I'll be not. We couldn't find another one we like nearly as well for that price. Why do you ask?"

"Well, the fire insurance policy on your home is about to expire. Before we renew it, I thought we should check to see if the present values suit you."

"How much insurance is on it?" Jim asked.

"That's the surprising thing," I answered. "While you wouldn't sell it for $10,000, you have offered it to our insurance company for $4,000 in case of severe fire. If your house is completely destroyed, we could only give you $4,000 to rebuild. You know that wouldn't begin to replace it."

"I hadn't thought about it that way," Jim said. "I wouldn't want to sell it to your company or anyone else for $4,000. We'd better double the insurance."

Perhaps YOU should check the fire insurance policy on your own home. It may be just as far out of line. We'll be glad to work with you—for your own protection!
