"When In Rome" Shows Grandeur Of Eternal City

During the two-months period required to film "When In Rome", MGM's unusual story of a priest and an ex-convict who form a strange comradeship. Producer Clarence Brown wheeled his mobile camera around to the great monuments, churches, ruins and scenic wonders that have made Rome world famous. First, Brown started by taking his camera on a pilgrimage of four of the most beautiful churches in the world: St. Peter's, St. John in Lateran, St. Mary Major and St. Paul-Outside-the-Walls. St. Peter's, with its mammoth dome on which Michelangelo devoted the last sixteen years of his life, is perhaps the best known church in the world. It and the square of the former circus of the emperors of early Rome. Then, there is the Colosseum, the oldest pagan arena still existing and the largest monument, covering six acres, in Rome. Started in the year 72 A. D. by Josephus Flavius, the conqueror of Jerusalem, it was not completed until the year 80, when it became the scene of the bloody 100 days games.

Other spots used as natural settings for "When In Rome" include the Trevi Fountain, the most beautiful and largest of Rome's more than 500 fountains; the Spanish Steps in the heart of old Papal Rome; the City's immense new railroad station, an architectural triumph with glass walls and ceiling; and a college which formerly a monastery, was built on one of the seven hills in Rome in the Seventh Century. It was on this site, the Aventine, that Romulus, founder of Rome was supposed to have held his pagan rite asking the gods to purify the arms with which he had killed his brother, Remus.

Background music is provided by a choir of fifty Italian boys, trained at the Scuola di Salvatore, world famous for having produced many outstanding composers and instrumentalists.
