the use of male hormones to produce increased rate of gain on relatively less feed, according to Dr. Ralph Bogart, animal husbandman.

Testosterone, the male sex hormone, was injected into the muscles of animals in trials last year. Increased gains of 4 of a pound per day was obtained. Feed savings amounted to nearly 150 pounds of feed for each 100 pounds of gain.

New tests are under way this year, Dr. Bogart reported. The aim is to find a more practical method of giving the hormone. Now they are mixing the testosterone right into the feed and results to date are promising.

The tests were started to learn whether the male hormone causes bulls to gain more rapidly than steers and both put on weight quicker than heifers.

On the basis of tests by Dr. Bogart, it appears that the hor-none does control the difference in rate and efficiency of gain to a large extent. A non-masculinizing hormone, methostan, was tested and had no effect on either rate or efficiency of gain.

Testosterone injections, while boosting the gains by heifers, did not quite bring them up to the level of steers getting the hormone. Heifers with testosterone gained 2.5 pounds daily while steers with the same treatment gained 2.7 pounds. Without the hormone, heifers gained 2 pounds a day and steers 2.4 pounds.

No ill effects were reported when the carcasses of the test animals were examined. They were marketed at 800 pounds with only a slight tendency toward bulliness showing up in one or two animals. Heifers did show a higher proportion of rear to front quarters than steers.
