Forestry Specialist Gives Suggestions For Fire Prevention
One way for Oregon campers to prevent forest fires is to take a tip from the Indians, says Charles R. Ross, extension farm forestry specialist at Oregon State college.
"White man make heep big fire—stand way off. Indian make little fire—sit down 'side him," is how the Indians used to put it. Ross advises campers to scrape away all flammable material from a spot at least five feet in diameter. Then they should dig a hole in the center and build the fire there, Indian-fashion.
Extinguish the fire beyond any shadow of a doubt. Standard procedure for experienced woodsmen is to stir and scatter the coals while soaking them with water, and then wet the ground around the fire. When it is thoroughly wet and feels cold, it is safe to leave. If water is not available stir lots of moist earth among the coals, turning and separating them, and tread on them afterwards.
Make sure the match is out by breaking it in two before throwing it away.
Smokers should observe the law that forbids throwing of cigarette stubs or pipe ashes from car windows. Smokers in the forests should be sure stubs or pipe ashes are dead out, and placed in non-flammable spots.
Carry an axe, a shovel, and a bucket in the car. If you see a fire, put it out. If you can't do it alone, get help. Report all fires to the nearest fire warden or ranger.

Remember, says Ross, the time to stop a fire is before it gets started.
