Start The Day Right

The importance of starting the day with a good breakfast to fortify our bodies with the needed energy for the tasks of the day is now well recognized by housewives and meal planners. But what of the importance of a spiritual tonic to give inspiration and stamina for the mind and soul?

Thousands of families have found that breakfast time is the ideal occasion for a brief period of meditation and prayer which gives a spiritual touch to the whole day. With the aid of a devotional guide and the Bible, any family can have a meaningful, inspirational, and helpful family worship. It proves to be an important factor in strengthening family ties and in giving a feeling of family unity to have father and mother or one of the children read a Bible passage, a devotional message, and a brief prayer.

Dr. J. Manning Potts of Nashville, Tennessee, editor of The Upper Room, the world's most widely used devotional guide, points out that any family can easily arrange to share the few minutes that such a program requires. The experience of countless families showing the importance of starting the day right—giving each member of the family a sense of well-being and a renewed faith to help them meet the problems of the new day—is the result of morning devotions.

In children the establishment of the basic habit of daily renewal of their spiritual strength will be a resource that will aid them throughout their lives. The Upper Room, which provides a daily meditation for each day, is available through 50,000 churches in the United States.
