

95 Bulls Consigned For Baker Sale

A buyers market is in prospect at the Oregon Cattlemen's Association Bull Sale in Baker, September 23rd, according to Frank Anderson, member of the Association's Executive Committee.

"The consignors were asked not to bring more than 80 head," states Mr. Anderson, "but 95 head of Angus, Hereford and Polled Herefords were catalogued for sale. This excessive offering of bulls will find favor among the buyers." Mr. Anderson continued "since all the animals will have to be healthy and of top quality, otherwise they will not be allowed to sell through the sale. The grading on September 22nd, which is open to the public, will be handled by Judge Tippett of Enterprise and Charles Kyd, State College of Washington, livestock extension specialist. Following the grading there will be a dutch lunch and entertainment for spectators and prospective buyers."

Mr. Anderson concluded by stating that buyers can insure their bulls at the sale against loss, and also that the buyers of top selling pen of bulls and top selling individual bulls will take home bronze model bull trophies donated by the Association. Ellis White, Ontario, will be the auctioneer.

This Rock Was Old When Christ Was Born

Fort Rock, lonesome citadel of the High Desert southeast of Lapine towered 800 feet above a glacial lake more than 9000 years ago, so geologists tell. That was more than 8,000 years before Cleopatra sailed her gilded barge to woo Marc Antony, before she faced Caesar's command before his throne wrapped in a silken rug and not much else, before she finally bared her bosom to the cuddled asp. Fort Rock is supposed to have thrust its vast bulk up when another volcanic explosion dug Paulina and East lakes; 2,500 years before Mt. Mazama blew its mighty top to leave Crater Lake as a lure for the tourists of today. And, geologists have unearthed ancient sandals and other artifacts from the volcanic strata of a nearby lava cave which tend to show that primitive man resided there, first inhabitant of our America more than 70 centuries before the birth of Christ or Cleopatra's gilded jurnies.
