New Fan-Shaped Glass Backboards

The new fan-shaped basketball backboards made of Herculite will provide greater free visual area for spectators. Development of the fan-shaped glass backboard came as a result of scientific measurement of places hit by a basketball. The study revealed that the important area is in the shape of a big fan or kidney, which eliminated the necessity of a four by six foot rectangular backboard. This latter type has been mandatory on recommendation of the Association of College Basketball Coaches. Fan-shaped backboards already have been approved by the National Basketball Committee and have gained in popularity with high schools and secondary schools. Long vigorous tests under actual playing conditions have shown that $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch Herculite is four to five times stronger than ordinary glass of the same thickness.
