Reddy Kilowatt Reports to You!

"You gave me more work to do!"

In the past year, Reddy Kilowatt put in an average of 5,376 hours of work in each Pacific Powerland home he serves, an increase of 393 over the previous year—and 2½ times the national average.

"My hourly wage was actually less"

How much did Reddy get paid in 1952 for his work in Pacific Powerland homes? An average of only 1.38 cents per kilowatt-hour—compared with 1.40 cents in 1951, and 2.04 cents in 1942. Even with his present temporary "cost-of-living" surcharge, Reddy's pay is only about half the national average.

"I've got 2,727 new bosses!"

Pacific Powerland is growing steadily. Last year Reddy Kilowatt was called upon to serve the needs of 2,727 new homes, farms and businesses in Oregon and Washington. Now he's at work in a total of 149,054 different places.

"My tax bill was $4,726.069!"

State and local taxes for the support of schools, roads, and other public services amounted to $2,179,068. In addition, Reddy paid $2,547,001 for the support of Federal government.

"For you—a big new dam!"

Largest single construction job for Reddy Kilowatt in 1952 was the 108,000-kilowatt Yale Project. During the year, $18,264,400 was needed to carry forward work on this project which will help meet the growing demand for Reddy's low-cost service.

"More building kept me busy!"

New power lines, substations, and other equipment needed to serve you took another $4,253,589 of investment.

Your faithful servant
Reddy Kilowatt

"And in 1953, as always, I'll be your Partner in Progress."
