When a family buys or builds a home, the loan company insists on fire insurance in the amount of the mortgage. As time goes on, they assume that the fire insurance is adequate because they pay for it each month in their mortgage payment.

This is a dangerous practice. Suppose your home costs $10,000 and you have a $6,000 loan and the same amount of insurance. If you have a complete burnout (and such things do happen), the mortgage will be paid off. But, you will receive exactly NOTHING for your equity. Are you willing to sell your home for the amount of the mortgage?

Or, even suppose you have paid your mortgage down to $4,000 and have $6,000 in fire insurance. In event of a total loss you'd have exactly $2,000 and a vacant lot with which to start over. Are you willing to sell your substantial home investment (the down payment and the years of monthly payments) for so little?

Let's face it. If you have a major fire tonight what will you use to rebuild? Full coverage costs very little extra. Why not let us figure this out for you?
