2000 Will Attend 4-H Summer School At OSC June 16-26

Oregon's 1953 4-H summer school is slated for June 16 to 26 at Oregon State college with 1800 boys and girls expected to attend, reports Burton Hutton, state 4-H leader. Local 4-H leaders and extension agents will swell the total attendance to 2000.

The scholarships the boys and girls attend the school on are awarded for outstanding 4-H achievements at state or county fairs, by agricultural, business and service groups, home extension units and some private individuals.

Because there are usually more applicants than accommodations at the college, attendance is set up on the basis of county quotas. County committees of extension agents and 4-H club leaders select the young people, from 12 to 21 years of age, who best qualify for the scholarships.

Hutton says the summer school affords educational opportunities for the young people with its morning classes and special assemblies. Sports classes and recreation leadership groups will provide for recreation.

Of special interest this year will be classes on new processes in preserving fruit. The new, modern laboratory will also be open to the boys and girls, says the state leader.

STATE WHEAT LEAGUE HEAD URGES CONTINUED FEDERAL DAM BUILDING

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25—Lester F. King, of Helix, president of the Oregon Wheat Growers League, urged today that federal construction work on dams already started in the Pacific Northwest be completed as soon as possible and that construction of new ones be started immediately. He presented a statement before the senate subcommittee on army functions.

"Money spent by the federal government for development of the Columbia River is not an expense but an investment," he contended, noting that a large percentage of federal expenditures is paid back directly to the federal treasury with interest by users of power and irrigation.

Such expenditure is really a loan from the federal government which will be repaid many times over, he declared.

The house appropriations committee has refused to budget funds for new dam starts in 1954 and sharp cuts have been made in the appropriations for some dams already started.

King is one of six men from the Columbia basin who were in Washington today to emphasize the need for federal participation in river development.

The others are James Hill, Jr., manager of the Pendleton Grain Growers; Charles Baker, manager of the Pacific Supply Cooperative, Walla Walla; Roland E. Miller, assistant publisher of the Walla Walla Union-Bulletin; Herb West, executive secretary of the Inland Empire Waterways Assn.; and John W. Shepherd, manager of Lewiston Grain Growers Cooperative.

In addition to appearing before the senate subcommittee the delegation planned this week to see Sherman Adams, special assistant to the President; Joseph M. Dodge, director of the budget; Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay and members of his staff; Gen. Samuel Sturgis, chief of the corps of engineers, U. S. Army; and house and senate majority and minority leaders, besides senators and representatives from the Northwest.

The OWGL in 1950 urged the speediest possible development of the Northwest's water resources, and in 1951 endorsed comprehensive development of the Columbia and Snake rivers in accordance with the revised report No. 308 of Leadership classes will be a special feature for the older members and group discussions will be conducted with recreation leadership development included. The teaching staff for the summer school classes includes staff members of OSC, both extension and resident, and visiting commercial company representatives.

the army engineers.

Development of the Columbia River and its tributaries is necessary, King said, because of the need of barge transportation of wheat and petroleum and other products so that farmers can meet rising costs of farming operation.

He added: River development is needed to bring about diversified agriculture and to provide power for growth of old industry and establishment of new industry.

"The kind of dams we need are not the kind of dams that are built by private power companies," King asserted.

"The whole nation benefits from river development in the form of income taxes, newly created wealth, employment and homes for our growing population, and by protecting property from flood destruction," he said.

IONE TRAIL TROTTERS
The Ione Trail Trotters met up to the Heppner Fair Grounds on Saturday May 16.

Howard Bryant and Jim Farley gave us some instructions on how to use a rope and how to tie a knot. They showed us how to tie a calf.

Nels Anderson, Jim Ellings and Ed Cole who were from Oregon State college came out and they went out to Merlyn Robinson's place. Before noon we were told and showed the parts of the horse by the two men from OSC.

After dinner we went out and Mrs. Kirk demonstrated to us how not to show a horse. It was real funny as she put it on in a comedy form. After that Merlyn showed us how to show a horse correct.

Merlyn had two yearlings that Judy Howton and Grace McCabe took out and showed. Then Janet and John Howton, Jerald Rea and Mary Emert took some other horses out of the barn and showed them. We also judged the ones which Janet, John, Mary and Jerald showed.
