Beef Likely to Stay On Plentiful Rating

Beef will be on the plentiful list for the next three or four years if marketings of cattle repeat past trends, says Ed Coles, Oregon State college extension livestock marketing specialist.

A study of trends show large supplies of beef follow periods of increasing cattle numbers, Coles explains. Cattle have been increasing in record numbers since 1949 and reached an all-time high January 1 this year.

The specialist further explains that cattle are only a potential supply of beef—it's the rate at which cattle are slaughtered that determines beef supply. So far this year, the rate of slaughter has been 30 percent above a year ago. If the present rate continues, the turning point in cattle numbers could be marked this year.
