What should I do if I have an accident?" Mr. Jones asked as he stopped by to discuss his car insurance.

"You should get in touch with us as quickly as possible," I replied, "but first of all note the time, place and circumstances of the accident. Get the names and addresses of all injured parties and available witnesses. It may be useful later in helping to settle any claims which arise."

"That sounds like common sense," Mr. Jones replied.

"Here's another suggestion which you might follow. Carry a small notebook and pencil in your car. Jot the facts and names down. Don't rely on memory."

"Of course," I continued, "you should call the police promptly if the accident is within the city limits. The law requires it."

"The insurance company will make a thorough investigation, but naturally its ability to get the accident settled promptly and fairly depends on your cooperation."

Mr. Jones smiled. "I'll get that notebook. I don't expect an accident, but then the unexpected can happen."
