Portland Man Named General Chairman Of Meat Conference

Walter A. Holt of Portland will serve as general chairman of the Oregon livestock and meat marketing conference January 6 and 7, according to Frank L. Ballard, associate director of the Oregon State college extension service.

The conference, at which all sections of the livestock and meat marketing industry in Oregon will be on the OSC campus.

Holt's association with the livestock industry has been both long and varied, Ballard noted. A graduate of Washington State college in horticulture and animal husbandry, he has been a farmer and stock raiser, county agent, and is now manager of the Pacific International Livestock Exposition in Portland.

For many years he was secretary of the Oregon Wool Growers association and served on the executive committee of the National Wool Growers association in don the board of directors of the American Wool Council. Holt managed the Oregon ram sale for 18 years.

County Cattlemen's association and helped organize and put on the annual Pacific Coast Aberdeen Angus purebred show and sale at Pendleton. Last year, he was chairman of the Portland chamber of commerce agriculture committee.

The January conference is being sponsored by the extension service in answer to a request from the people of Oregon to know more about marketing the state's agricultural products. The request came at the statewide agricultural and rural life planning conference in 1952.

Livestock marketing was selected because of its importance to the farm economy, Ballard said. About one-fourth of Oregon's agricultural income is from livestock.
