Smorgasbord Greeted New Year's Guests At Anderson Home

A little bit of Sweden was found at the lovely country home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Anderson New Years Day when the Andersons with Mr. and Mrs. James Farley were hosts and hostesses at a Swedish smorgasbord.

During the afternoon and evening approximately seventy persons enjoyed the many tasty varieties of food displayed on the table near the handsome brick fireplace with copper hood in the Swedish provincial kitchen. Many of the foods were labeled in Swedish and several American foods were also served.

In the spacious living room the guests were greeted by a drawing of a small boy and girl of Sweden over the fireplace mantel wishing them a Happy New Year in Swedish.

Canned Peas Good In Potato Nests

Canned peas, one of the leading vegetable packs, have an established popularity based on their delicate and sweet flavor. This attribute accounts for their acceptance "as is" and why they can be combined with so many other vegetables. For a substantial vegetable course, serve canned peas atop baked stuffed potatoes. And let the canned food shelf provide other menu suggestions. For the main course have baked luncheon loaf with a peach syrup glaze, accompanied by cling peach halves filled with pickle relish.

Peas in Potato Nests: Bake 3 large potatoes in hot oven (450°F.) one hour. Cut potatoes in half being careful not to break shell. Scoop out potato; mash, season with salt, pepper and butter. Add hot milk to make fluffy mashed potatoes. Put back in shell heaping the potato at the sides and leaving large depression in center. Brown under broiler. Drain a 1-pound can peas; reduce liquid by boiling to about one half. Add peas, salt, pepper and butter; heat to serving temperature. Fill potato centers with peas. YIELD: 6 servings.

Luncheon Loaf with Peach Garnish: Place 2 luncheon meat loaves together in baking pan; score the top and insert cloves. Sprinkle with 3 tablespoons of brown sugar. Pour 1 cup syrup drained from canned cling peaches around meat. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 30 minutes, basting several times during baking with the syrup. During last 15 minutes, place peach halves in pan with meat and fill centers with pickle relish. YIELD: 6 servings.

Dwarfism in Beef Cattle Discussed in College Bulletin

An inherited "dwarfism" has been showing up more and more in beef cattle the past few years, not only in the purebred herds, but also in commercial herds, says J. T. Ellings, extension animal husbandry specialist at Oregon State college.

Most dwarf cattle are very easily identified. Ellings states. Many of them have short broad heads, a bulging forehead, stunted growth, heavy breathing, pot bellies, and protruding lower jaw—sometimes as much as a half inch or more.

In the new OS extension bulletin, the specialist reports there are many more dwarf carriers than was first suspected. Dwarfism in beef cattle isn't confined to any one of the three major beef breeds, Ellings writes.

Also in the publication is information about a method of identifying dwarf-carrier cattle. Using an instrument called a "profilometer" developed by Dr. P. W. Gregory of the University of California, two profiles of an animal's head are taken. These two profiles are analyzed to determine whether the animal is a dwarf-carrier or dwarf-free.

Ellings says the present outlook is that in mature bulls it is possible to determine whether bulls are carriers of dwarf-free 90 percent of the time by taking head profiles.

Until recently, identification of dwarfism by profilometer had been attempted only on bulls 30 months of age or over, the publication reports. However, recent work by Dr. Gregory and associates indicates that it may soon be possible to identify dwarf-carrier and dwarf-free bulls at much younger ages—possibly as yearlings or even at weaning time.

The bulletin, "Dwarfism in Beef Cattle", also includes information on how dwarf cattle are produced and factors breeders should consider in eliminating dwarfism from their herds. Breeders who wish to have their bulls profilometer-tested should contact their county extension agent, the publication states.

Copies of the bulletin are available from county extension offices and OSC.

Watch Party Held At Wightman Home

The home of Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Wightman was the scene of a New Year's eve watch party, when their daughter Janet entertained for the members of the seventh grade.
