house public works committee, Congressman Coon declared that Cougar project showed promise of setting a pattern of bringing government closer to the people.

"Even though the proposal looks promising, however," he added, "I would urge that this proposal and all proposals like it be studied with care to insure that they do not give undue advantage to any special group, public or private."

Declaring that the administration and the Congress were effected to pioneer new ideas and ways of doing things, Congressman Coon concluded "We must expect everything we do in the field of water and power to be measured on the yardstick of wise and far-sighted resource development. It is not enough only to aim at doing the job as well as it has been done in the past.
