Food Sense—Not Nonsense

Winds Blew Free—But Sailors Had No 'C'

Of those who sailed the high seas of old, it rarely could be said, "they never had it so good." Food supplies on voyages were limited and outbreaks of scurvy were common. Scurvy is now known to be caused by lack of vitamin C.

It was by chance that sailors discovered that citrus fruits could prevent scurvy. Science revealed that the anti-scurvy—antiscorbatic—vitamin C—now known as ascorbic acid. Although scurvy is rare in this country today, a lack of adequate amounts of ascorbic acid in the diet can be recognized. A shortage will result in weakened walls of the capillaries—those tiny blood vessels which form an amazing network in the body. Those who have mild shortages may bruise easily. Lack of energy, muddy complexions and slow healing of wounds are other indications of a deficiency. Scurvy in children is frequently diagnosed as infantile rheumatism. If a deficiency of vitamin C is not too advanced, it may be corrected by adequate amounts of the vitamin in the diet.

Because the body is limited in its ability to store vitamin C, this nutrient must be obtained daily. The easiest way to meet the daily C requirement is through a generous serving of citrus fruit at breakfast. In fact, a well planned breakfast will not only furnish vitamin C but will furnish significant portions of the other nutrients we require. Enriched or whole grain cereal or toast, an egg or serving of breakfast meat and a glass of milk supply the breakfast's share of proteins, B vitamins and minerals.

Daily use of canned or fresh tomatoes, or tomato juice is also a simple way to get one's vitamin C. Often overlooked as sources of this nutrient are potatoes, cabbage and green vegetables, especially if uncooked.

Although vitamin C is more readily destroyed by heat or exposure to air than other vitamins, it is not always lost in cooking; most of the original "C" is retained in a baked potato. Acid fruits, prepared and refrigerated overnight lose little of this vitamin by breakfast time.
