ROSY SAYS: Here are my predictions of what the new 1955 model cars will offer. All makes of cars will have a V-8 motor in their line. Some cars will have a modified ball-socket front suspension. Some makes of cars will have suspended brake pedals. All makes of cars will have tubeless tires. Ford has been building V-8 motors for 22 years. Ford has been building cars for one year with Ball-Socket front suspension. Ford has been building cars with suspended brakes and clutch pedals for three years. Ford cars have been coming thru with tubeless tires since last July. I predict that Ford will again be ahead of the field with new beauty and new performance again in 1955.

Future Homemakers Attend District Meeting at Nyssa

Nine members of the Heppner chapter of the Future Homemakers of America attended the eastern Oregon conference at Nyssa Saturday, Oct. 16. Girls making the trip were Alice Peterson, vice president; Sharon Rill, secretary; Marilyn Pettyjohn, treasurer; Barbara Warren, historian; Ginger Andressen, reporter; Judy Collins and Peggy Applegate, assistant recreation leaders and Shirley Kononen, assistant parliamentarian. Driving them to Nyssa were Mrs. C. A. Warren and their advisor, Mrs. Homer Hager.

The group left Friday and enroute visited the new La Grane senior high school homemaking department. They were impressed with the architectural design of the department and some of the features they observed were the unit kitchens, the variety of electrical appliances including stoves, refrigerators, automatic garbage disposal, automatic washer and dryer, and freezer. At Nyssa the girls were guests at a night football game and dance.

The theme of the conference was "United we work for better homes." The meeting was presided over by Joretta Moeller of Nyssa and 15 schools were represented by more than 250 girls. The guest speaker was Mrs. Cecil Trueblood of Wilder, Idaho, whose topic was "work", and she emphasized to always make work dignified. She also stated that by thorough cleanliness of personal grooming, students would reflect on the appearance of their school buildings, grounds and community surroundings. She also emphasized the importance of religious training in the home.

The girls expressed amazement at the variety of activities completed during the past year by other Eastern Oregon F. H. A. chapters.

Cattle, Wool and Pork Outlook Bulletin Issued by College

Continued large cattle marketings with prices staying about the same or slightly lower seem likely in the year ahead, say extension agricultural economists at Oregon State college in the latest "Agricultural Situation and Outlook" circular. Larger wool returns can be expected under new farm legislation, but increasing hog numbers point toward even lower prices for producers. M. D. Thomas, OSC economist, explains in the circular that beyond 1955, chances are cattle prices will not improve much and may decline moderately more for a year or two. The decline would be sharp only if consumer incomes slip some. Even then, Oregon cattle prices should be back in fairly favorable position in relation to other farm products by 1960.

Tipping the balance toward lower prices in 1955, and for a year or two beyond, are prospects for larger national supplies and lower prices for pork, and possibilities of some decline in the amount of money people have to spend. Beef supplies will stay large but may not increase much over this year's all-time high. A brighter future is seen for sheep in view of new farm legislation that makes possible larger returns from wool in 1955 and probably for at least three years beyond. Lamb prices may not be much higher than during the past two years until beef moves into a better position, Thomas continues. This is likely to take two or three more years.

Acting under the authority of new sections added to the federal farm law this year, the secretary of agriculture has raised wool supports to 62 cents a pound starting next April. This is 196 percent of the September 15 parity price and an increase of about 9 cents a pound over the 1954 support level, Thomas explains. Individual flock returns next year may be increased more or less than 9 cents a pound, depending on where the market settles for the various classes of wool and how the average market price next year compares with the support level.

A build-up in hog numbers is starting again in Oregon and the nation, and prices, already down nearly one-fifth from a year ago, may become a real problem by 1956. Copies of the "Agricultural Situation and Outlook" circular are available from county extension offices and OSC.

Church Conference Stresses Worth Of Rural Service

Need for more ministers, teachers, doctors and other professional workers to serve rural communities with pride rather than loss of prestige in not "moving up" to more populated areas key-noted this year's Oregon Town and Country Church conference at Oregon State College.

More than 225 ministers and lay leaders representing 19 church denominations in Oregon heard nationally-known church and farm leaders attack the problem that rural communities are too often "stepping stones" for young professional workers or "pastures" for older persons who have not succeeded in the city. Rev. Shirley E. Greene, Denver, said we must "plow back" into rural communities each year at least 100,000 of the nation's best young people for professional and vocational work — including farming. The speaker, intergroup relations director for National Farmers Union, said such action is necessary to maintain rural areas as the basic source of food and clothing and as the "seedbed" of population.

George E. Wilson, president of California Farm Bureau Federation, advised conference delegates to copy success of "going concerns" by organizing their church programs and "assuming positive leadership" within the area of religion. Wilson said too many ministers of small rural churches underestimate their importance for challenging current issues. A requirement of a rural minister, he stated, is a sense of dignity for his assignment and respect for rural communities and farm people.

Rev. William B. Spofford, Payette, Idaho, advised ministers to worry less about total numbers in the congregation and more about what the church was offering them. "We should not be ecclesiastical 'scalp-hunters' or entrepreneurs in the 'numbers racket'. Do we add numbers to our church to glorify God or to massage our own egos?" He is director of National Town-Country Church institution, Western extension center.

The conference, now in its eighth year, is sponsored by Oregon's major church associations, farm groups, Oregon State college, and Oregon Home Economics extension council.
