4-H Forestry Club Materials Issued

New materials on the 4-H forestry project are available now for members taking the project during this club year, according to Cal G. Monroe, state 4-H extension agent.

In forestry, club members take hikes into the woods to identify trees, plants and wildlife.

Both city and farm youths can take most of the forestry projects, Monroe said. Older boys and girls who have available land can become "tree farmers" in an advanced project. In it, they learn

Oregon Health Meet Slated at O. S. C.

How Oregon is meeting the needs of the chronically ill will be featured at the fifth annual Oregon rural health conference December 13 and 14 at Oregon State college. Meetings are open to the public.

Care of patients, both at home and in institutions, financing and prevention will be covered.

Sponsor is the Oregon rural health council, which includes farm groups, state agencies and organizations interested in health programs.

Dr. Robert Heilman, director of the state board of health's chronic disease section, will report on how many Oregon people who have prolonged illness and what the diseases are.

Social and emotional aspects of their care are to be included, in addition to discussions of medical, hospital and nursing care.

What communities can do to help rehabilitate those with prolonged illnesses will be explored. A drama, "The Room Upstairs," will be presented by the Benton county branch of the mental health association.

A panel on pesticides will be among second-day features.

Dr. J. H. Stewart of Bend is the chairman of the rural health council and Miss Elizabeth Baldwin of Portland is conference program chairman. Mrs. Mabel Mack of Oregon State college extension service is arrangements chairman.

Detailed information on conference plans may be obtained from county extension agents or county health departments.

how to take care of woods, windbreaks and woodlots.

Any boy or girl who will be 9 years old before January 1, is eligible for the beginning project, Monroe reported. Five or more members and an adult leader are required for a standard 4-H club.

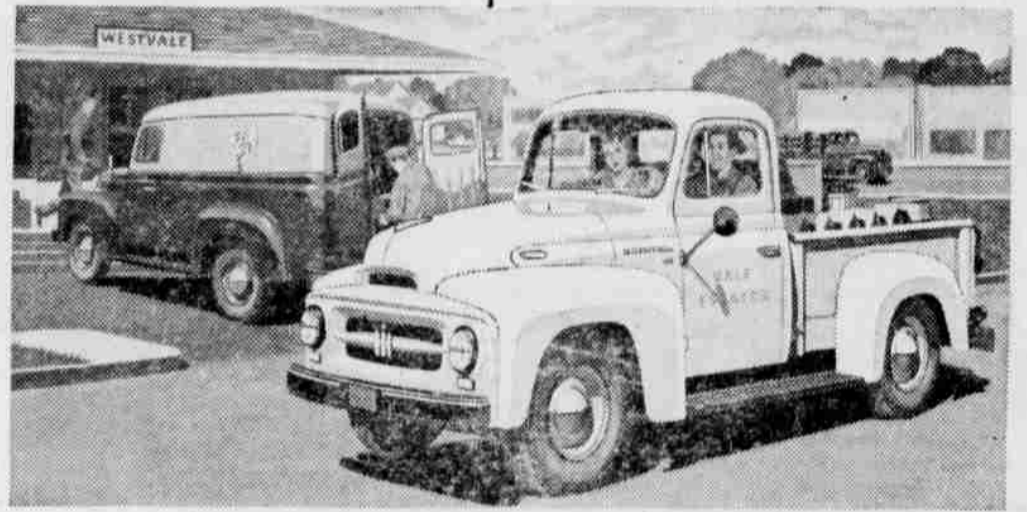

Instructions for the project are available to leaders so that anyone interested in boys and girls and the outdoors can successfully lead a 4-H forestry club, the state agent explained. Information on organization may be obtained from community 4-H chairmen or county 4-H extension agents.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Cohn spent the weekend in Roseburg where they attended a woolgrowers meeting.
