COON COMMENTS

Continued from Page 2 "In brief, there should be greater non-federal participation in water resource development, but this participation should not be so great as to impede progress at a time when sound conservation and development of our water resources is more essential than ever before."

MOST OF US on Capitol Hill feel that the President showed a great deal of wisdom in going to Congress for approval of his action on Formosa. President Eisenhower came to us for our advice because he wanted to know how we, who represent the people of the nation, feel about this major international step.

As you know, we have chosen to make our stand. We all hope very earnestly, that this decision will mean a stronger peace for the world. Representative Walter Judd of Minnesota, a former missionary who spent most of his life in China, summed up the view for most of us. This is what he said during the debate in the House: "There is risk of war if we act, but there is also hope of peace. There is greater risk if we do not act, and no hope of peace."

I've always remember what an old pioneer told me. In talking about the early days when the Indians were a constant threat to settlers in Eastern Oregon. He said, "We always trusted God, but we kept a carbine within easy reach." Faith and self-reliance make the unbeatable American combination. It has pulled us through many a tough spot as a nation. And we know that it will again.

All bids to be in the possession of the undersigned Recorder of the City of Heppner not later than 8:00 o'clock P. M. on March the 7th, 1955 and the Council reserves the right to reject any and all bids. Dated this 16th day of February 1955. TED SMITH City Recorder 49-50c

Market Quotas Hold On Wheat Used For Feed

Because marketing quotas are in effect on wheat this year, any wheat grown on acres in excess of farm acreage allotments is subject to quota penalties even if it is fed on the farm, says J. R. Beck, assistant director of the agricultural extension service at Oregon State college.

Many farmers have raised the question why wheat that is raised for feed—and isn't sold on the market—has to be included under quota allotment provisions. The law, Beck explains, is clear on this point. It's a provision of the controlling legislation and not a matter for administrative ruling.

Smaller producers—those with acreage allotments of less than 15 acres—do not come under the marketing quota provisions if their total wheat production on the farm does not exceed 15 acres, he continues. In these cases the penalty for exceeding acreage allotments is only the loss of wheat price support eligibility.

For those growers with allotments of 15 acres or more, all wheat produced on acreage outside the established farm allotment is subject to quota penalties. There is no provision for exempting feed wheat even if it is fed on the farm where produced.

Beck pointed to a recent comment on farmer protests against acreage limitations on the production of wheat which they are growing for feed by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra T. Benson.

The secretary said he "hopes Congress will review this provision of the law which was enacted about 13 years ago... In preparation for any review by Congress, I am seeking advice on what changes are practical to permit the production of wheat for feed, without penalty, if no wheat is sold and farmers do not desire price support on other crops."

Bulletin Explains Features, Effects Of Wheat Programs

Wheat growers aren't the only people concerned with what would be the best wheat program for the nation, points out a new bulletin released by the land-grant colleges of Oregon, Washington and Idaho.

The publication, "Which Wheat Program," explains those directly concerned include farmers producing feed grains; livestock, dairy, or poultry producers; handlers and processors; the consumers; taxpayers; administrators; and other nations. Interests of all these people need to be kept in mind when considering farm programs, the bulletin authors explain.

Three other points considered important are discussed. The first is the need to consider food needs and preferences of people in the country. Second, the need to remember that conditions growing out of past programs influence the results of programs that follow. Third, there often is a big difference between "short-run" and "long-run" effects of any program.

To help wheat growers get a better understanding of these things a committee of agricultural economists of the extension services and experiment stations of Oregon State college, University of Idaho, and the State College of Washington prepared the bulletin. It was published cooperatively by the three institutions.

In it, a "quick look" is taken at six federal programs for wheat that have been tried or suggested. The main features and probable effects of the rapid price supports, domestic parity plan, compensatory payments, forward pricing, and free market prices are presented.

The bulletin was used recently during a series of discussion meetings in Oregon's Columbia
