VACANCY ON FEDERAL BENCH

Almost a year ago Judge James Alget Fee resigned his position on the federal bench in Portland when he was elevated to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Vacancy has not been filled altho several efficient and prominent men have been nominated by local and state bar associations. These include Former State Senator Alan G. Carson, Salem; Judge Ralph M. Holman, Oregon City; Lamar Tooze, Portland; Judge William G. East, Eugene; Supreme Court Justice William C. Perry. Recently the names of former senate president and speaker of the house Eugene E. Marsh and former speaker of the house William M. McAllister, Medford, have been speculated fifth for the appointment.

The latest is that Nicholas Jauregy will receive the appointment. He is a former law partner of Ralph Cake and Lamar Tooze.

TOO LATE OR TOO SOON

State-wide political news sources here at the Capitol report a phlegmatic condition prevailing in the rank and file of the Republican party in Oregon. Local party drum-beating creates only echoes. Pep-up letters from Washington office holders and party promoters do not energize the faithful. Local GOP leaders say it is too soon after defeat of the head of the ticket to start bonfires.

This column got yanked at in some quarters when last June we reported that the Republican chiefs were starting the campaign too late. We were accused of plugging for the Democrats and one high source intimated it was none of our business. That's what a writer is liable to get from a promoter who wants only his side of the news printed and that slants his way so far a woodpecker wouldn't light on it.

Last year the Republican campaign started too late and now the start is premature.

What is nobodies business is bad business.

Farmer's Share Of Food Dollar Shrinks to 43c

Higher wages paid for food processing and more food packaging services demanded by consumers helped shrink the percentage of the American food dollar that went to the farmer in 1954.

Oregon State college extension economist Mrs. Elvera Horrell reports that farmers receive 43 cents of each consumer's food dollar last year compared to 51 cents in 1947.

Direct labor costs make up a large part of the marketing bill, says the economist, and higher wages since the end of World War II have increased the proportion. Last year, payments to workers engaged in assembling, processing, transporting and distributing food products took nearly 55 cents of the consumer's farm food dollar. Such labor made up only 46 cents of the dollar in 1947.

Higher cost marketing is traced largely to more services including more processing and packaging. Instead of flour, the housewife often buys frozen or brown-and-serve biscuits and rolls and mixes of all kinds. Chicken comes cleaned and cut up, meat sliced and ready to cook.

The gap between farm and grocery store seems destined to grow even larger, Mrs. Horrell believes, as long as the trend continues toward higher wages and "built-in maid services" through increasing processing.

Despite the shift to more ready-to-eat food items, American families spend no larger percentage of their take-home pay for food than they did in the "good old days" of the 1920's. The food budget has held relatively stable through the years at about one-fourth of the family income. But today's families are getting a greater variety of foods with higher nutritive value. Modern diets contain more of the protective foods such as meat, milk, eggs, fruit and green vegetables.

Text of the agreement for pooling cereal grain research findings by the three institutions has been released by agricultural experiment station directors. They are F. E. Price, Oregon State college; James E. Kraus, University of Idaho; and M. T. Buchanan of Washington State college.

Primary function of the program, Price stated, is development and release of wheat varieties for the Columbia Basin area.

He stressed the fact that the agreement provides not only cooperation in variety testing but in "orderly release" of new varieties. "The arrangement should give us the maximum and quickest use of new varieties. The arrangement should give us the maximum and quickest use of new and promising materials in all three states."

The experiment station director said that exchange of research knowledge has previously been practiced informally by the three institutions. He explained that the present written agreement on procedures and policies for release of new cereal varieties has long been sought as a much-needed step toward strengthening the Basin's wheat program.

Here's what the agreement provides for:

Exchange of promising new cereal selections among the three states.

Adequate testing of these selections in areas to be served. Also adequate quality testing where that is important. From such information, the scientists concerned will determine whether a variety is actually superior to present varieties and whether it should be released.

The simultaneous release of a new variety by all three states, where this variety is of value to all three states.
