SENATE PRESIDENT IN 1957 If you were a state senator and figured that you couldn't make the grade for president of the senate it would be good politics to promote someone you figured could. It is one way to get a choice chairmanship and get your local bills passed so the home folks will think you are a big shot and send you back to the legislature. The same pattern applies to the speaker-ship of the house. This is what sparks so many campaigns for these leadership positions so early. Sometimes a senator (at the moment there are two) will have a campaign well under way before he knows it.

Monday I talked with 12 senators about the 1957 senate presidency. Four wanted one senator, four wanted another, two were for one and two more were for another. I am revealing the candidates names — in the order of who had the most boosters; Sen. Warren A. McMinnee, Tillamook attorney; Sen. Carl H. Francis, Dayton attorney; Sen. John C. F. Merrifield, Portland; insurance and Sen. Paul E. Geddes, Roseburg attorney. Sen. Francis is the only "holdover" of the four. The others are almost sure to run for re-election with good chances of winning against a possible Democratic tide in 1956. Sen. Geddes may be put at the head of the National Resources commission and be out of the contest.

It is going to be a great race for a position that has made three Oregon senate presidents governor; Jay Bowerman, Al. W. Norblad and Paul Patterson. They are three of seven former governors now living; the others, Oswald West, Charles A. Sprague, John H. Hall, and Douglas McKay.

With the Democrats gaining it is a bare possibility that they could gain control of the senate. There are 12 holdover Republicans. The Democrats have only three. To get political control they need to elect 13 more senators in 1956. The Republicans need to elect only your senators for control.

The hopelessness that kept good Democratic candidates from filing has departed. They will have even better candidates in 1956. The Republicans might as well see to that they get only their best on the nominating tickets.

There are 25 Democrats in the present house. If they can do that well and elect four more in 1956 they will have control of the house for the first time since 1937 when they had 38 of the 60 members.

TO MAKE LOG TRUCKS SAFER

A legislator who knows his logging trucks and wants to guard the public as well as his logging equipment, has proposed an act requiring four binders on log truck loads of three or more logs. Rep. Lloyd E. Haynes, Grants Pass, who sponsors the act, is a part owner of the Illinois Valley Logging company, the Timber Haulers, Inc. and the K. & H. Logging company, said the only present regulations on the securing of logs come from the state industrial accident commission and he does not believe them to be sufficient for safety to the motoring public.

Under his bill any load of three logs would have to have four chains or other binders going completely around the load. This is the present requirement in California.

NEW BILLS BY CONSENT

The deadline for introducing bills in the House passed two weeks ago. Any bills now introduced must pass through the rules committee. Nine bills were given the committees approval last week. Oregon highway life-savers requested Rep. Alfred W. Loucks to sponsor a bill that would permit police officers to ar-

WITHOUT A SWINDLE SHEET

Paying their own expenses on a trip to the California legislature and back were Sen. Carl H. Francis, Sen. Harry D. Bovin and Rep. Leon S. Davis who want to get the know how about how California has reduced family desertion cases. Oregon is spending too much money in this direction and the senate Judiciary committee and the ways and means sub-committee are studying the problem. SALARY REPORT HELD UP More than 17,500 state em- (Continued on page 6)
