

Boardman Girls Chosen Arlington Rodeo Princesses

By Mary Lee Marlow
Three Boardman high school girls were chosen as princesses of the Arlington Rodeo to be held April 30-May 1, Sunday at Arlington. They were Wanda Forthman, Clara Douthit and Lorna Shannon. Queen of the rodeo will be Gayle Austin of Arlington and the fourth princess is Sue Coleman of Ione. The girls were chosen for their riding ability.

Greenfield grange met Saturday night at the hall at 8 p. m. Hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Forthman and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Bedord. The lecturer's hour was held before the business meeting with Mrs. Joe Taton, lecturer, in charge. Lorelei Hamilton sang "Blue Hawaii", and a baby Hawaiian dance in costume was presented by Linda Taton, Anette Phaneuf and Karen Gronquist. Charles Wicklander, Portland, showed slide pictures which he took on the grange tour of the Hawaiian Islands last year. There were 19 members present and 23 guests from Lexington and Westland granges, and Mr. and Mrs. Wicklander from Portland. Among them were W. B. Smith, master of Westland grange, and Alvin Wagenblast, master of Lexington grange. Following the meeting the birthday cake was served for those having birthdays during the first quarter of the year.

The Garden club met Monday night, April 18, at the home of Mrs. Tim Rippee, with Mrs. Florence Root as co-hostess. There were 11 members present, and visitors were Miss Jean Scott and Miss Zelma Cowan. Roll call was answered by giving a favorite rose. Slides were shown of flowers depending upon action by the USDA commodity stabilization service in setting discounts and premiums on various classes of wheat. These, along with other possible adjustments in determining the final support rates, are subject to approval by the secretary of agriculture.

Just how close prices stay to loan rates, the economist explains, depends upon several things including the amount of storage space and what it costs, government selling prices and subsidies on exports, willingness of farmers to sell below loan rates, and size and quality of the crop.

Regardless of where wheat prices settle for 1955, Thomas expects most Oregon growers who can find or provide storage to harvest up to their allotment. He says few will want to exceed allotments and incur penalties on marketings.

Loan rates at Oregon terminals and county points may vary up or down from the national averaging trees, the Brookings Lily parade, and the "Fleet of Flowers" at Depoe Bay. Plans were made to have a flower show on May 25. Some of the members plan to attend the Blue Mountain district convention at Stanfield on May 4.

Mr. and Mrs. Danny Ransier and three daughters, Stanfield, were Sunday visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Marlow.

Members of the Commercial Club have completed the installation of a water system at the new city park, and the lawn seeding was finished last Sunday.

Andy Anderegg returned home from St. Anthony's hospital in Pendleton Monday night, where he has been three weeks following surgery. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Anderegg brought him home.

Mr. and Mrs. Delmer Hug went to Oregon City Saturday, where they attended the funeral of Mrs. Hug's mother, Mrs. Gene Gurley on Monday.

1955 Wheat Prices Said Likely to Hold Near Loan Rates

Prices for Oregon's 1955 wheat crop should hold close to new loan rates to be announced this summer, less storage costs, says M. D. Thomas, Oregon State college agricultural economist.

Thomas believes most Oregon farmers will want to wait until final support rates are known before closing any sales on the new crop. The rates cannot be determined nationally before July 1 with announcements of local terminal and county rates to follow soon after.

As announced last fall, the national level will not be less than $2.06 a bushel or 82 1/2 percent of June 15 parity. If parity holds at its mid-March level, the national basic loan rate would be $2.08 instead of $2.06. The economist points out these figures are 16 to 18 cents a bushel less than the basic support rate for the 1954 crop.
