Jane Russell — 3-D Fan

HOLLYWOOD—Jane Russell, who proved to be the most popular subject of all for 3-D movies, reveals that she is an avid 3-D still photography fan. Jane originally obtained her View-Master stereo camera for the purpose of keeping a picture record of her two children as they grew. The project became so much fun, that now she takes the camera with her to the studio and on motion picture locations, taking photographs of each production she works in. Tommy and Tracy, her two children, are even receiving an introduction to their formal school education by being given 3-dimensional photographs from the vast View-Master picture library of world scenes like the new ones of Oregon's Crater Lake, California's Yosemite, Tennessee's Smoky Mountains and places of interest like historic Valley Forge and the new ones of the United Nations Buildings.

(1946) by almost three quarters of a million dollars, and were more than that ahead of last March. Gamble reported further that Oregon sales for the first quarter of 1955 exceeded those of last year by $3,200,000, or 32%. The gain nationally for the same period was 13%.

"Sales in the county last month were $22,329", said Jeff Carter, county savings bonds committee chairman, "as compared to $22,615 a year ago. Oregon's increase for the first quarter has been widely distributed around the state, with all but five counties ahead of their 1954 sales. Sherman county jumped over its entire 1955 quota by 29.6%, with its sales in the first quarter of 1955 exceeding those made all last year by $51,669."
