FIRE SCHOOL

(Continued from Page 1) The trainees on the ground. Small fires were started in the timber areas by instructors and then used to demonstrate the proper method of control. Mapping and fire detection classes were carried on under actual conditions which many of the men will find themselves later on this summer when the weather warms and the forest dries out. The proper use of fire tools and other forest service equipment was also explained and put into actual use by the men. The Tupper guard school is similar to those conducted in all other national forests. The Heppner district location was chosen because of its early season accessibility and because it fulfills terrain requirements for such a school. Due to the wet late spring and early summer no lookouts are yet on duty but all have now completed training for their summer jobs. They will be assigned as soon as weather requires.

Allen Case and Alex Thompson spent the first part of the week in Portland.

Driving Care Urged Over Long Holiday

The summer's second three-day holiday, the Fourth of July weekend, will see a maximum enforcement effort to head off accidents as thousands of Oregon motorists take to the open road, state safety officials said this week.

State police headquarters in Salem said all available personnel would be assigned to traffic patrol but that full cooperation of all drivers will be needed if heavy accident losses are to be avoided.

Particularly important will be the need for gearing your car's pace to the heavy traffic certain to be encountered, secretary of state Earl T. Newberry pointed out. All states are placing special emphasis on traffic violations associated with speed, Newberry said, in a nationwide program urging motorists to "Slow Down and Live".

Some of the deadlier driving mistakes, likely to be committed by drivers with an "in a hurry" complex, are improper passing, following too close, cutting in, and speeds too fast for conditions, officials said.

Five persons died in traffic accidents over the Memorial Day weekend, which also was a three-day holiday. Three were killed in Oregon traffic crashes during the Fourth of July weekend a year ago.
