Oregon, U. S. Wool Growers to Vote On Market Program

Oregon's wool producers, along with those in other parts of the nation, are getting the chance to vote in a referendum on whether an agreement providing for advertising, promotional and related market development activities on wool and lamb will be put into effect.

Ballots are now being distributed to producers and must be returned to county agricultural stabilization and conservation offices not later than August 19.

Ralph Peck, assistant director of the extension service at Oregon State college and state ASC committeeman, explains that any producer who has owned sheep or lambs for at least 30 days since January 1, 1955 is eligible to vote. Any producer who is eligible and who doesn't receive a ballot by the middle of July may go directly to his county ASC office and vote.

The agreement being voted upon is between the recently-organized American Sheep Producers council and the secretary of agriculture. It provides for deductions from wool incentive payments made to producers under the national wool act of 1954. These deductions will provide a means of financing the market development program. Before the agreement can be put into effect, producers owning at least two-thirds of the sheep and lambs represented by votes in the referendum must vote their approval.

If the agreement is approved,

CONGRESSMAN SAM COON was on hand to greet representatives of the Oregon State Junior Chamber of Commerce as the passed through Washington, D. C., enroute to Atlanta, Georgia, for the Jaycee National convention. Pictured from l. to r. the deductions from payments for the 1955 incentive program will be 1 cent per pound from shorn wool payments and 5 cents per hundred pounds of live weight from lamb and yearling payments. Deductions will be made from the federal payments in 1956.

While regulations permit cooperatives to vote as a group, members of the major large cooperatives such as the National Wool Marketing corporation, the Pacific Wool Growers, and the Ohio Wool Growers Cooperative association will vote individually in the referendum.

OSC Studies Radio And TV Interference From High Voltage

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Radio and television interference from high voltage transmission lines will be studied this year by the Oregon State college engineering experiment station under a new $8600 research grant from Bonneville power administration.

The study is expected to provide information helpful to both government and private electrical power suppliers in reducing the radio and TV noise and picture distortion. It is the latest in a group of projects conducted by OSC for Bonneville since 1951.

Louis N. Stone and F. O. McMillan of the electrical engineering department will direct the study.

The problem of radio interference is getting increased attention with construction of more and more high voltage lines in populated areas, Stone explained. TV is affected less than radio because of its higher frequencies but it too poses a worry near high voltage lines.

As part of the project, the OSC engineers will work on correlating results from laboratory tests with field conditions.

Being able to predict radio interference on the basis of controlled laboratory tests will mean substantial time and money savings for firms designing new lines, Stone said. It will also assure lines without excessive interference.

Tests on transmission line conductors and accessories will be conducted in the high voltage laboratory in Dearborn hall, OSC's new electrical engineering building. It is one of the best equipped laboratories in the Northwest.

OSC is one of the nation's pioneers in research on radio interference from high voltage equipment. Professor McMillan first started studies in 1929 and various projects have been conducted over the years for power utilities and manufacturers. The new project will take a year to complete.
