State Cuts Livestock Brand Inspection Fee

Livestock brand inspection fees in Oregon was reduced July 1 from 30 cents to 25 cents a head, reports M. E. Niekerbocker, chief of the division of animal industry of the state department of agriculture.

Also effective July 1, the department will put into use a new series of stock brand inspection certificates. These will be issued only by authorized inspectors, about 100 of whom are working throughout Oregon on full or part time basis.

The reduction in fees will mean a substantial saving to Oregon cattlemen and allied livestock enterprises, says J. F. Short, director of agriculture who approved this official order on the 5-cent drop in inspection costs. During 1954 the movement of cattle through brand inspection points in Oregon reached a new high of more than 700,000 head. Through May, 1955, inspections each month this year were higher than in the same month last year.
