

25 Oregon Growers To Increase Stocks Of New Omar Wheat

Twenty-five eastern Oregon wheat growers selected to increase seed stocks this year of Omar wheat—a new highly smut-resistant red chaff club wheat designed to replace Elmar—met September 13 at Pendleton to draw final plans with the Oregon seed allocation committee.

Committee chairman D. D. Hill, Oregon state college farm crops department head, says the 25 growers will receive a total of 400 bushels of registered seed for increase on about 700 acres in Umatilla, Baker, Union, Sherman, and Gilliam counties.

Growers were selected for their facilities to maintain genetic purity of the new variety and to make rapid increase of stocks on high-yielding land. The committee will retain control of 80 percent of the production for further distribution next year.

Hill said the distribution policy operates on the principle that new varieties developed at public expense should not be monopolized and should be allocated to give most rapid increase of seed stock for the industry.

Allocation of seed supplies in Oregon next year will be in proportion to counties current production of club wheat varieties. The committee's 1956 goal is 20,000 bushels of Omar—enough to seed 30,000 to 40,000 acres. Omar outyielded Elmar in all the more humid areas of the Pacific Northwest in extensive tests by experiment stations of OSC, Washington State college and University of Idaho. It has excellent milling and baking qualities and is superior to Elmar as a soft pastry wheat.

The new wheat was developed from an Elgin 19-Elmar cross by Orville Vogel, USDA plant breeder stationed at WSC. Plant pathologists report the new variety as the most highly resistant wheat to all known races of smut in their experience. Smut resistance tests were directed by C. S. Holton, USDA plant pathologist also stationed at WSC.

WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS"

By C. WILSON HARDER

Abraham Lincoln is reputed to have said "You can fool part of the people all the time, all the people part of the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time."

It is not by accident that Congressional Committees are now closely studying the activities of the enforcement of the nation's anti-trust laws. Nor is it perhaps just chance that Edward H. ...

that office was C. W. Harder, opposed by the National Federation of Independent Business has resigned as chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

In fact, it might even be established with some degree of probability that Attorney General Herbert Brownell performed a great service for independent business in this nation when he appointed the Attorney General's Committee to Study the Anti-Trust Laws.

The majority recommendations of this august body were so heavily in favor of weakening, or eliminating the protection given by the nation's anti-trust laws that so much smoke was raised many Congressmen decided to look for the fire.

By and large, Congressmen have a common peculiarity. They hate to be spoofed. In addition, they are Americans adhering to the American traditions which include from Mississippi river boat days to the gold rush days of the West the looking with asstance on stacked decks.

It was therefore quite natural that one of the first things the Senate Small Business Committee took up when making a study of the Attorney General's special committee on anti-trust laws was to find out just who was on committee that so wholeheartedly impugned anti-trust laws.

It is important to remember it was a 61 member committee. Here is the breakdown.

Of the 61 members 33, or a clear majority, were corporation attorneys who together have fought the government in the past few years in a total of 228 anti-trust actions. Some of the biggest domestic and international firms were their clients in these cases. Four other members were college professors who have appeared as "expert" witnesses for corporations involved in anti-trust proceedings.

This line-up, to say the least, rather provoked Congressional curiosity, especially as findings of this group were quite critical of anti-trust laws.

In fact, Congressional attitude might be compared to that which would exist among racing judges if a hotly contested race between twelve horses finished in a dead heat. While those racing judges might not come right out and say that there was tomfoolery in the stables before the race, they would be mighty curious, and would do some looking around.

And that probably best explains why at present time Congressional committees are looking into anti-trust matters so deeply.

Right now, Congressmen are not talking about any tomfoolery, but things are coming to light which are making them curi- ser and curlouser. In time, it could develop that the corporation lawyers who composed majority of this committee made the mistake of forgetting the Allean admonishment that runs "People who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

Drivers Reminded School Zones Mean "Slow Zones"

With schools throughout the state back in full operation, state safety officials repeated one of the season's most important traffic warnings this week: slow down in school zones.

Oregon's designated speed for school zones is 20 miles an hour, Secretary of State Earl T. Newbry reminded, but sometimes speeds lower than that are necessary. The 20-miles-an-hour restriction applies when children are going to and from school and during recess periods. However, Newbry said even this speed may be too high if youngsters are crowding the crosswalks and school grounds.

Drivers were cautioned to be especially alert during the early weeks of the school term for first-graders who may be uncertain or frightened by traffic. Others can be excited to run into the streets without looking or suddenly appear from behind parked cars or other obstructions.

More than 360 Oregon schools are now operating student-maned school patrols at street crossings, an activity which has proved quite effective in reducing the hazards to children, the secretary said.
