ALL ABOUT BABY

Away With Harmful Bumps

HAVE YOU EVER WATCHED a baby trying to round a corner when he's learning to walk? If you have, you've seen how frustrated he gets. But that can't happen in the circus-gay, wholly safe Play-A-Round, the circular playpen developed, after years of scientific study, by Tigrett of Chicago. A unique construction permits baby to walk his way around easily, increasing his confidence since he doesn't have to contend with difficult square corners. Resilient nylon mesh net around the sides lets him exercise his fingers, arms—helps him coordinate. Made of aluminum, strong enough to hold two grown-ups, the Play-A-Round weighs under 16 pounds, and folds up in a wink into an easy-to-store item, which fits into the back seat or rear compartment of a car, or stashes away behind a door.
