CAPITAL PARADE Continued from Page 2 information at Oregon State College has a one-year leave commencing January 1, 1956. The appointment seems a definite signal that Patterson will run against U. S. Senator Wayne Morse next November and that Shideler will be his press agent.

JUDICIAL COUNCIL The first meeting of the Judicial Council created by the 1955 Legislature has been called for December 10 by Chief Justice Harold Warner.

The council has as its purpose the continued survey and study of the organization, jurisdiction, procedure practice and methods of administration and operation of various courts throughout the state. Some 40 circuit judges and seven members of the supreme court will attend.

CONVENTION CITY An event in Oregon's capital last Saturday sparked ideas with state mail and Salem city planners concerning convention and similar public parades. A ten-block Christmas parade, sponsored by Salem Merchants, brought out a record number of parade viewers—mostly children, who thrilled at the fairland extravaganza floats and six bands. The excellent view of the parade afforded by the block-square new Meier & Frank Salem store started the planners thinking—and talking.

Now Salem has not only the largest store in Oregon outside of Portland, it also has a super-grandstand for parades. The "trial run" Saturday accommodated more than 10,000 people who saw the show from 12 of the block-long balconies on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th floors of the store. An estimated 7,000 more thronged both sides of the streets surrounding the store.

This, the planners declare, should make Salem even more attractive as a convention city.

MERRY BLUE BIRDS

The third grade Blue Bird group met with their leaders,

Mrs. Helen Cox and Mrs. Lewis Cason in the school lunch room November 22.

All members were present with one new member, Judy Smith, welcomed into the group.

The first business was deciding upon a name for the group and after considering several suggestions, a majority vote favored Merry Blue Birds.

We are very happy to learn that Mrs. Stockard's Blue Bird group had invited us to join them in singing carols for the patients at the hospital.

We worked hard and fast on our scrap-books for the shut-ins, as Christmas gifts, but they are not quite finished. Before adjournment Cathy Sanders, Barbara Terrell and Welma Warren served refreshments.
