A Change in Sports

We have started baseball this week and have 13 fellows out. We have been playing catch and learning the fundamentals of batting. We have also started on track this week and have 11 fellows out for this sport. We are well equipped this year with a new shot put, a new discus, a new javelin, and a new pole vaulting pole. In tennis, we have 13 fellows out. We are learning the fundamentals of the game. We are hoping to have a meet with some of the fellows from some of the other schools.

English Lit. Class

English III literature class has been studying non-fiction selections written by well-known and expert news reporters, such as William Shirer, Ernie Pyle, and Daniel Lang who were eyewitnesses of their narratives.

One article by W. L. Shirer, was about the armistice signed June 21, 1940. The writer watched through field glasses and listened in a sound truck in the woods not far from the armistice car in which the Germans had hidden microphones.

The irony of this is that this time the German plenipotentiary, Hitler, has his revengeful triumph by meeting surrendered France at the identical spot in the forest of Compiègne, in the same old French sleeping car in which Marshal Foch laid down the armistice terms to Germany twenty-two years before. This time Hitler occupies Marshal Foch's chair and uses the same table for the signing. The German dignitaries arrive at 3:15. Through field glasses, Shirer, notes the expressions of hate and scorn on the faces of Hitler, Goring, Keitel and the other German dignitaries—all in uniform with the Iron Cross hanging from the left breast pocket. They strut around in their Prussian boots, reading inscriptions on statues written by the French, following War I. At 3:18 p. m. Hitler's personal flag is run up. At 3:23 p. m. Hitler and his followers enter the armistice car. Now, thru the microphones Shirer hears the armistice terms. The speakers and then the scratching of the pens as they sign the armistice. Hitler did not wait for details. The whole ceremony is over in a quarter of an hour. "Break-through in Normandy" is another selection relating to war, this one being War II. In this, the writer, Ernie Pyle, participated in the "break through", met Gen. Bradley, slept and ate with the boys from colonels to privates. He slept in trenches and heard the bombs whistle and swish overhead. He experienced the tenseness of muscles and the nerves of the men when they were under the awful attack of their own American troops. Ernie Pyle expressed this from first hand experience, July 25, 1944.

The Atomic City is written by Daniel Lang. His writing is concise and informative and he perhaps gleaned as much information from this war-born community of Oak Ridge, Tennessee, with its tradition: "secretiveness, as anyone. Men working there were instructed not to give any information, and they themselves did not know what they were working on. One inquirer asked a watchman once, if he were sure that wasn't the Vatican.

These articles are excellent examples of reporting—first-hand news information given in a narrative style.
