PP&L Tells Plans For $157 Million 5-Year Construction

A five-year construction program costing more than $157,000,000 is planned by Pacific Power & Light company to meet the continued growth in use of electricity in the area it serves, declared the utility's annual report for 1955, which is reaching stockholders in this area this week.

In addition, points out Paul B. McKee, president of Pacific Power other large lums will be required during this period for the company's proposed part in a number winner will be announced as soon as the tournament is over.

The grade school baseball team beat Lexington, May 12, 8-3. Two games are scheduled for this week with Lexington and Con-of large power developments needed in the Pacific Northwest region.

The estimated five-year program compares with a total of $150,000,000 spent in construction by Pacific Power & Light in the ten years since the end of World War II. Construction in 1955 required $14,300,000.

Electricity delivered to customers on the Pacific Power system showed an all-time record increase of 13.1 per cent during 1955, the report says.

Total revenues for the year were $44,360,000, an increase of 9.3 per cent. Net income was $8,997,000 before provision for deferred income taxes, compared with $8,080,000 in 1954.

Direct taxes charged to the company's operations totaled $7,335,000, a 29.4 per cent increase.

Customers served by the company now number 295,660, of whom 271,641 are supplied with

Ponderosa Pine, Fir's Rates High For Tank Stock

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—In the search for new woods that will withstand chemical solutions, ponderosa pine sapwood and the true firs show a surprisingly high resistance, according to the report of a chemical engineer at the Oregon Forest Products laboratory.

J. D. Ross found resistance of ponderosa pine and white and noble fir to acid, base and salt solutions to be as high, or higher, than that of many woods used for conventional tank stock.

Species generally preferred for tank stock include Douglas fir, redwood, southern yellow pine and cypress.

Ross' tests show that ponderosa pine sapwood maintained the greatest strength against acid action. Rating just under the pine were noble fir, Douglas fir, and white fir. They made up the top four woods in a list of 16 tested.

Ponderosa pine sapwood also rated highest in resistance to bases. Noble and white fir showed the greatest resistance to salt solutions, followed by pine sapwood.

Ross pointed out that volume of lumber used for tank construction increased from 22.9 million board feet in 1933 to 63.8 million in 1948.

The Oregon Forest Products laboratory is a state-research agency mainly financed by a timber-harvest tax. It is located on the Oregon State college campus.

Copies of the report are available from the laboratory.
