

Club Sponsoring Safety Campaign

By Mary Lee Marlow
The Boardman Tillicum club is sponsoring a Fourth of July telephone safety campaign. Each member will call four friends on the phone and ask them to drive carefully over the holiday, and ask those four people to each call four more, and so forth. Mayor Joe Tatone urges all citizens thus contacted to give full cooperation to the campaign.

The club met on Wednesday night of last week at the home of Mrs. Ray Gronquist for their regular meeting which was postponed from Tuesday. Mrs. Zoe Billings was taken in as a new member. Food Industry Adds Jobs; Farmer's Share on Decline Population increases and growing demand for conveniences in food packaging and processing have added nearly one-half million new jobs in the nation's food marketing industry since 1950, reports Elvera Horrell, Oregon State college agricultural extension economist.

The trend of built-in food convenience is causing a wide gap between prices farmers receive and the food price tag at the corner grocery, the economist says. In 1955 farmers received only 41 cents of each dollar spent for his produce—the other 59 cents going for rising costs of getting food from the farm to the family table.

About 400,000 more people were working in the marketing of farm produced foods last year than in 1950. And each food processing and marketing employee's earnings averaged about 28 percent more per hour than in 1950.

Retail prices for domestic farm produced food now averages 20 percent more than in 1950. Homemakers can trim the grocery bill by using time and energy for more home-processing of food, says Mrs. Horrell, or time and energy can be saved by paying for the services.

OSC to Test New Forage Crop Pest Control Chemical

A new "highly effective" chemical for control of insect pests in forage crops is scheduled for test this summer by Oregon State college scientists to see if the treated livestock feed results in any harmful residues in meat, eggs or milk.

The possible boon to hay and pasture crop production needs only clearance with the U. S. department of agriculture food and drug administration as a safeguard of human health. It has already been shown that animals are not harmed by amounts of the chemical needed to control the pests.

OSC was selected by Shell Chemical corporation, manufacturer of the product, for a $35,250 research grant to complete tests before January 1 for an FDA ruling on commercial distribution of the material.

The grant will be administered through the agricultural research foundation at the college, according to R. W. Henderson, assistant director of the OSC agricultural experiment station.

Varied dosages of the chemical will be used this summer in feed for about 50 head of dairy and beef cattle, hogs and sheep, and 50 laying hens and fryers. Milk and eggs will be tested each week for traces of the chemical. FDA is especially stringent on purity of milk because of its wide use as an infant food.

Half of the meat animals will be slaughtered at the end of a 12-week feeding period and chemical tests made of tissue. The remaining animals, along with the dairy cows and poultry, will be tested for an additional four to six weeks on feed that is free of the insecticide to learn if possible residue deposits decrease.
