WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS" By C. WILSON HARDER

It is significant 90% of nation's independent businessmen in a nationwide membership poll by National Federation of Independent Business favor repealing exemption from anti-trust laws now enjoyed by unions.

Obviously, the unions will pick on the huge retailing operations first, for many reasons.

And so union leaders and management will negotiate over terms of a contract. It is a certainty management will strive to get terms to their advantage, and to detriment of independent competition. It is also certain union leaders will not fight to preserve independent business.

Thus, as has happened in other fields, there will be what amounts to a conspiracy to prescribe wages, hours and conditions for all retail sales persons along the pattern that is best for a few huge retailing operations.

To make their contracts good, the union leaders will then have to enforce this pattern on all.

Any independent merchant bucking this unholy alliance will be subject to union reprisals.

While all this activity may not be worthwhile to the union merely to collect dues from a few scattered sales people, on other hand, if they don't enforce the same contract on all, they jeopardize contract relationship with huge retailers with their thousands of people paying dues.

Thus, unions can accomplish things for big corporations which the corporations could not do for themselves without facing prosecution for violation of anti-trust laws. And while some may say that in taking the stand they have, the nation's independent businessmen are, as the phrase goes "labor baiting," this is not the case. It's just that U. S. Constitution never set up provisions for a class immune from laws which govern rest of society. The Founding Fathers were opposed to old doctrines of Divine rights of kings, whether those kings came from pedigrees in the Almanac de Gotha, or from picket lines.

By and large, today independent retailers pay more for sales people, because they select people who possess that hard to define intangible, superior sales ability. In addition, their training is such that many of these independent sales people get the experience that enables them to open their own business. Huge retailing operations pay less money, but are content to have mediocre sales people, and hope the more competent will want to continue in the corporation.

It is difficult to see sales people fit into a labor union.

Selling and sales ability is an intangible that has nothing to do with education, background, or degree of intelligence. Some people make superior salesmen. Yet there are many brilliant people who could not sell $5 bills for $2.
