WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS" By C. WILSON HARDER

It is quite possible that in the new Congress there will be quite a different attitude toward foreign relations.

The foreign aid programs for one thing, which have soaked up billions in American taxes, will be subjected to a long hard look.

It is also quite possible that a close scrutiny will be given the United Nations.

Action by England and France in proceeding with armed might against Egypt C. W. Harder without UN sanction could well have great reverberations on Capitol Hill.

In fact, it ripples in many quarters that these two nations, supposedly standing shoulder to shoulder with the U. S. in holding down uprisings, pulled a sneak punch.

Two of the nation's most influential senators have already expressed doubt over continuance of foreign relations on the same old basis.

Sen. William George (D., Ga.) feels Anglo-British action will cause the end of NATO. Sen. William Knowland (R., Cal.) feels it means the end of the United Nations.

Neither of these Senators, it should be said, look with favor on Egypt's Nasser. But the resort by individual nations to armed force perils the peace of the entire world.

Yet, despite the fact that England and France have been the heaviest recipients of the $70,000,000,000 in foreign aid extracted from American taxpayers, they refused to heed the requests of Washington not to start a shooting fracas. It is probably a tribute to American integrity that they started shooting without letting this country know in the knowledge that if America had known their intentions in advance, a protest would have been registered.

The nationwide membership of National Federation of Independent Business has on several occasions voted to curtail foreign aid expenditures.

While perhaps some have taken this to mean that the nation's independent businessmen are isolationists, or against spending money for the promotion of peace, these opinions have been grossly in error.

Independent businessmen, operating at the grass roots level, have a sense of direction often lost in the rarified atmosphere of bureaucracy. Thus, they know that nothing is accomplished by bribes or blackmail, whether it be securing new customers, or securing the peace.

And it is ironic that arms bought with American gifts to preserve the peace were used to breach the peace.

Thus, many bureaucrats feel that England and France played a dirty trick on the U. S. . . . kind of a biting hand that feeds them on a multi-billion-dollar scale.

But along the Main Streets of America it was expected. This Main Street sentiment, long ignored by Congress, will be hard to shunt aside in the coming session.

school after which Santa Claus arrived and handed out Christmas treats.

Lexington School Program Held
By Delpha Jones
The Lexington public school held the annual Christmas program on Thursday evening of last week. First on the program was the first four grades who sang a group of Christmas songs. All were dressed in choral costumes, followed by "What Christmas Is" by the 5th and 6th grades. Nadine Waddill accompanied by Mrs. C. C.
