

Record Vegetable Crop Harvested In Oregon in 1956

Almost ideal weather helped Oregon growers harvest a record crop of vegetables for processing last year, according to Steve Marks, extension agricultural economist at Oregon State college.

Value of vegetable crops harvested for processing totaled $21.5 million—almost a third more than the year before, Marks says. Oregon's output of nine of the 10 main vegetable crops grown for processing weighed close to 300 million tons. This is about 40 percent more than was grown in 1955 and considerably above average.

While the acreage in the state planted to vegetable crops was somewhat larger than the year before, Marks says the increased production in 1956 came mainly from higher average yields.

Largest yield increases over the previous year were found in green peas, up 125 percent over 1955; sweet corn, with an increase of about two-thirds; and cucumbers which were up 60 percent.

National production of vegetable crops for processing also set new records. More than 8 million tons of vegetables, with a record farm value of $315 million, were sold for canning and freezing.

Oregon ranked third among the states in value of vegetables produced for processing. California topped the list followed by Wisconsin, Oregon, New Jersey and Washington.

Oregon Farm Products Sales Up 3% in 1956

Farmers have more money in their pockets this year, according to U. S. department of agriculture statisticians. And Oregon farmers are sharing in these higher incomes, reports Mrs. Elvera Horrell, extension agricultural economist at Oregon State college.

She says sales of farm products in Oregon from January through September of 1956 show an increase of 3 percent compared with the same months in 1955.
