Relatively few of the commodities important in Oregon show up on the January above parity list. Among commodities grown in Oregon only apples, at 114, was above parity, other commodities ranged something like this, rye 74%; Lambs 73%; wool 72%; corn and calves each 68% beef cattle 67% potatoes 64%; and chickens 61% of parity.

A recent bulletin released from Oregon State college is entitled "What We Use For Money". I looked it over closely thinking there might be a secret formula for substitute for money outlined in the bulletin. While looking for this information I found a lot of points in the booklet which I think our Morrow county people would be interested in. The bulletin is a brief, easy to understand explanation how the nation's monetary system works. Some of the questions answered in the new bulletin are what we use for money?, Where does money come from?, and the things that troubles most people, where does it go? Author of the bulletin is E. L. Potter, professor of emeritus of agricultural Economics at Oregon State college. He is an authority on agricultural finance and has been on the board of directors of an Oregon bank for 25 years. Copies of the bulletin are available at this office.
From a recent meat animals and wool report we find that a pool of some 20,000 fleeces of mostly 3/8 blood Eastern Oregon and Western Idaho wool was contracted the past week on a high bid of 56 and 3/8 cents a pound, grease basis. This is 10 and 3/4 cents more than the same pool brought last year. The wool is from mostly farm flocks. In Lake county 30,000 pounds of farm flock wool was sold to Portland at 55 cents a pound. The Klamath wool pool sold at undisclosed volume at San Francisco at 53.6 cents a pound.
Experience indicates that accidents stem from two causes which are 1. unsafe condition, 2. unsafe conduct. In industry management eliminates unsafe conditions; the second cause requires workers to be sold on importance of safe conduct. In agriculture, the farmers have both responsibilities—that of making safe working conditions, and, seeing that both he, his family, and employed persons conduct themselves in a safe manner.
Oregon Views Given On How U. S. Should Compete With Russia
United Nations pressure on Russia and "private" expansion of U. S. industry to meet Russian economic competition abroad were favored as foreign policy alternatives by Oregonians balloting in the current Great Decisions program for 1957.
Oregon State college this week tabulated opinion ballots on the issue, "How Should U. S. Compete with Russia," as viewed by discussion groups throughout Oregon.
This was the first of eight key foreign policy issues that will be tackled by informal groups participating in Great Decisions, sponsored this year by the OSC extension service in cooperation with other educational agencies and organizations. Opinion ballots for each issue will be tabulated at OSC and sent to the U. S. state department and congress.
Ballots on the first issue of "Competition with Russia," indicated strong reliance on United Nations to check Soviet expansion.
While Oregon Great Decisions voters shied away from arbitrary government planning of U. S. industrial growth, the majority favored some form of voluntary industry-government planning to compete with Russian industrial expansion.
Oregon voters gave high priority to close planning with Western European allies to avoid damaging competition among free-world partners in developing economic strength to compete with the Soviet.
Groups discussing the first issue also favored U. S. industry cooperation with educators in establishing more and better technical education. They opposed setting up new schools at federal expense to train teachers and students in engineering and the sciences.
Suggested policy for dealing with communist satellites favored working with United Nations in focusing world attention on what the Soviets are doing. Broadcasting of "freedom" programs into satellite countries also rated high among alternatives of foreign policy.
Help to noncommunist countries, especially under developed ones, in building profitable business with the West received strong support among Oregon voters. Approaches included opening of U. S. markets, discouraging trade with Russia, and strong air programs to build up underdeveloped countries.
Ballots now being tabulated at OSC for the second of the eight issues deal with the problem of "What U. S. Policy for Europe." Persons still wishing to join informal discussion groups for the current series may get details from your local county extension agent.

OSC Develops Frozen Fruit Toppings Made Of Low-Pectin Sugar
Recipes for frozen strawberry toppings for ice cream sundaes that "set" with little or no sugar have been developed by food technologists at Oregon State college with a new low-sugar pectin.
Lois Sather, OSC food technologist, reports that after a year's storage at zero degrees Fahrenheit, the frozen fruit toppings have excellent consistency, flavor, color and texture.
Most commercial toppings are made with ordinary pectin that requires more sugar and cooking to "set" the mixture, says Mrs. Sather. As fruit undergoes long cooking, volatile acids which contain natural berry flavors, may be "boiled" away. With the new low-sugar pectin, however, fruit is heated slightly—just enough to dissolve the sugar.
The low-sugar pectin provides an unsweetened product for weight watchers, too, reminds the OSC food technologist. Regular pectin requires at least 1/2 cup of sugar to one cup of fruit before jams will "set." The low-sugar pectin will "set" products containing little or no sugar.
Six-month storage tests are being made also on other Oregon fruits—frozen raspberries, blackberries and cherries.
