

Ione Legion Takes 2nd in AAU Playoffs

The Ione Legion basketball team won second place in the state AAU playoffs last weekend in Hermiston losing the final game Sunday night to the Portland Outdoor Store squad 86 to 63.

The Ione Townies, a last minute choice as host team for the playoffs, had run over its Saturday night opening series competition, the Arlington team, by a score of 102 to 85 after having previously lost to the same squad the week before. Ione made an excellent showing in the series, but was unable to stop the first-class floor work and hoop-hitting of the Portland team which won top honors.

Three Ione team members were chosen on the all-star team from the tournament play, they were Schadiwitz and Cable of La Grande and Schiewe of Pendleton, who joined the Ione squad prior to the finals. Others on the local squad who saw action last week end were Larry Pryse, Jerry Bristow and Richard Rea.

Team manager Bob Hoskins expressed satisfaction with the showing made and also thanked all team members and county residents for their cooperation during the very successful season.

CONGRESSMAN AL ULLMAN on February 5, received his Boy Scout Badge as part of Boy Scout Anniversary Week observances. Presenting him with his pin is Rhodes A. Cox of Cub Scout Pack 57 of the District of Columbia.

Monthly Marketing Of Turkeys Seen From OSC Research

Fresh turkeys may start moving to market every month of the year if research at Oregon State college continues to be successful.

At present, most fresh turkeys reach market in the fall since turkeys lay their eggs in early spring and the poults that are hatched from January to May mature just in time for holiday markets.

But J. A. Harper, OSC poultryman, reasoned that if the turkey hens could be tricked into laying eggs during other seasons, turkey growers in mild climates—like in Oregon—could hatch and produce turkeys for fresh markets the year around.

Knowing that changes in length of day can often affect the egg-laying habits of poultry, Harper decided to try to change the egg-laying habits of turkey hens by keeping them in darkened pens where their "length of day" could be controlled.

Starting in August, he kept 8-month old hens on nine hours of light a day for three weeks. Then, he used artificial lights along with regular daylight to give the hens a day length of 17 hours.

The scheme worked. During September through November, the hens laid about half as many eggs as they normally do in early spring, almost enough to make the idea practical.

Harper thinks he can make the hens do better, however, and has several other tricks he wants to try. If he's successful, fresh turkeys from Oregon farms may be reaching markets every day of the year.

Oregon 4-H Tractor Clubs Plan 2-Day Portland Area Tour

Oregon 4-H tractor club members will see what goes on behind the scenes of farm equipment manufacture and maintenance when they visit Portland March 14 and 15.

A two-day tour has been scheduled for 4-H tractor club members who have completed one year of tractor work, according to Cal Monroe, state 4-H extension agent.

Club members will arrive in Portland Wednesday night or early Thursday morning. Their first visit will be the General Petroleum corporation bulk plant at Linnton where fuels and lubricating oils arrive by ship, are stored, processed and distributed over the state.

The morning's program also includes a trip to the Portland International airport where the 337th Fighter Group will stage an airlift demonstration.

Visits to the zoo, a television studio and a newspaper office are afternoon attractions. Thursday night, 4-H members will have a banquet at the Nortonia hotel. Program items include tractor demonstrations and reports from the National 4-H Club Congress.

On the final day of the tour, members will go to Oregon City to visit the Crown Zellerbach paper mill. Later in the day, they will return to Portland for tours of the Oregon Saw Chain corporation, the Hyster company, manufacturers of lifting equipment, and the Columbia Tractor and Implement company. An evening banquet provided by the Portland Tractor and Implement association will complete the two-day event.

Volunteer 4-H club leaders and extension workers will help conduct the tour, the fourth of its kind in Oregon. County extension offices can provide more program details.

Additional Tree Seedlings Available

A supply of broadleaf tree seedlings, suitable for planting in the eastern part of the state, is now available at the Oregon forest nursery near Corvallis, according to assistant state forester Vance L. Morrison. The species include black locust, caragana, Chinese elm, Russian olive and Russian mulberry, Morrison stated.

"Orders must reach the state forester before the end of March", the forester stated, "since it will be necessary to dig all trees by that time in order to prepare the ground for the next crop."

"It is recognized that tree planting in eastern Oregon depends upon frost and snow conditions but the state maintains a refrigeration plant at the nursery and the trees can be stored until shipping time as indicated by the individual ordering the trees."

Information relative to ordering the trees may be secured by writing the state forester at Salem or getting in touch with the local county agent's office.
