How Standard's research helps put jet aircraft in the stratosphere

Standard's new synthetic oils help conquer withering jet heat and stratospheric cold.

TEN MILES UP WHERE THE JETS FLY there's a world few men know. Temperatures from 70 to 100 below zero make ordinary lubricants thick and sluggish on controls that must respond instantly. But within jet engines, moving parts must be protected against withering heat up to 600° Fahrenheit.

Standard has "built" synthetic oils that stand up under both extremes. In less than five years these oils will be helping jet airliners whisk you safely to your destination, farther, faster, and more comfortably than ever before. We've been working toward that day since 1942 when Standard supplied the fuel used in the first jet flight in the United States.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA
plans ahead to serve you better

Progress in the West means . . .

Air travel will nearly double by 1965

Jet airliners will carry twice as many passengers at twice the speed of conventional planes. Standard is getting ready now for 1965 when U.S. civilian and military demand for jet fuel will surpass aviation gas by more than 300,000 barrels a day.
