SPECIALIZED TRAINING GIVEN AT PACIFIC TELEPHONE PORTLAND SCHOOL

School is out for Oregon's 377,000 elementary and high school students. But for the craftsmen and women of Pacific Telephone's plant department in Oregon, classes will go on through the summer months.

At the new centralized training center on Portland's East side, telephone employees learn how to construct, install, operate, maintain and repair the equipment that provides many kinds of service for hundreds of thousands of customers in the state.

Known as the plant training school, this year-around technical institute has as its motto, "Learn By Doing." And Pacific Telephone employees come from all over the state to do just that.

Students from more than 20 Oregon communities, in addition to those from the metropolitan Portland area, have attended the school so far this year.

In the first five months of 1957 over 56,000 training hours were recorded. C. B. Scott, plant training supervisor, estimated that close to 150,000 hours of training will be completed by the end of the year. A telephone man with 17 1-2 years of experience, Scott directs training for the company's plant people on a craft and management level.

Classes are taught by training foremen selected for their technical knowledge and teaching ability. Instruction ranges in length from several days to more than 25 weeks.

Both new and experienced employees are trained at the school. Rapid advances in the field of communications makes the demand for specialists greater every day.

A look at the school's curriculum gives a ready indication of this need for trained specialists.

Courses are taught in operation and maintenance of local and long distance switching equipment, teletypewriter, telephoto, complex telephone systems for business and industry, FCC radio requirements, microwave radio for television and telephone use, local and long distance equipment testing, splicing, construction and maintenance of cable and other "outside plant," mathematics, electrical theory, electronics, drafting and many other subjects. There is even a class to teach the teachers how to teach.

"Training," Scott points out, "is going on constantly in all the other departments of the company, as well as our own, for the benefit of the employees, our customers and the company itself."

Oregon Wins Award For Pedestrian Safety

Oregon's 1956 pedestrian protection program has won a first place award from the American Automobile Association.

In Oregon's classification of states, New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware were in a three-way tie for second place and California and Colorado received honorable mentions.

State officials said the award was made on the basis of reports submitted covering Oregon's pedestrian casualty record, accident records, legislation and enforcement, engineering, safety organization, school safety and public information.

The 1956 pedestrian toll in the state was 53 deaths and 1267 injuries. This compares with 67 pedestrian deaths and 1298 injuries in 1955.

FISHERMAN!

fire prevention means

Good Fishing

A pan of water is often enough to douse the careful fisherman's campfire. But the careless sportsman can start a raging inferno that thousands of men, with the most modern equipment, can't control.

Forest fires burn an average of 25 million acres of America's woodlands each year. Fishermen know what these fires do to trout streams and good trolling lakes. They also know how nine out of ten fires may be prevented—by obeying the law of the woods.

For more than 300 years, Americans have found good fishing where the trees grow green. Do your share to pass on our outdoor heritage to tomorrow's sportsmen. Help keep fires out of our woods.
