Wheat Smut Found In Omar Fields, Seed Care Urged

Victory of a new race of smut over the efforts of plant scientists to develop a smut-resistant wheat emphasizes the need for farmers to treat seed for smut control, according to W. B. Raymer, extension plant pathologist at Oregon State college.

He said a new smut race has been reported in test plantings and several commercial fields of Omar wheat, near Pullman, Wash. C. S. Holton, USDA plant pathologist stationed at Washington State college, said the new smut race is probably a hybrid, developed through the accidental crossing of several known smut races.

Previous to this, Omar had come through 10 years of testing without showing a single smutty head. The new pastry wheat was released two years ago for production in the higher rainfall areas of eastern Oregon and Washington and northern Idaho.

While no cases of smut have been reported in fields of Omar in Oregon, D. D. Hill, head of the farm crops department at OSC, advised farmers to treat all seed including Omar—before planting. This would greatly reduce the amount of smut infection, he pointed out and should delay introduction of the new smut race into Oregon wheat-growing areas.

Hill also suggested farmers buy Omar seed from smut-free fields if possible, but emphasized seed treatment would still be a wise precaution.

Seed treatment with one ounce of 75 percent PCNB pentachloronitrobenzene, or with one ounce of 40 percent HCB (hexachlorobenzene), per bushel of wheat seed was recommended by Raymer. These materials, used as directed on the label, should completely control seed-borne smut and greatly reduce infection by soil-borne smut organisms, he said.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold H. Hill left Monday for their home in Coos Bay after spending several days in Heppner.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Bedford were in Portland Friday and Saturday of last week.

Kristy and Susie Koenig are visiting their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Mathison in Walla Walla for a week. John and Mark Koenig are in Portland this week visiting their aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fox.
