WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS" By C. WILSON HARDER

There are growing signs that Congress is growing rather tired of the State Department attempting to run so many affairs of government.

In fact, it might well be possible that in the course of events, Congress will go to work on some very substantial curtailment of State Department authority.

A case in point comes from California where the cultivation of some 500,000 acres of grapes.

C. W. Harder is an important bloc in that State's economy. About half of these grapes go into the making of wine. Wine is also produced in other states such as Ohio and New York.

Now the advertising and promotion of wines varies in each state, according to local laws. But in addition the Federal government, through the Alcohol Tax Unit, also exercises authority over the content of advertising copy in wines.

For many years the fiction has been built up in this country that no wines produced in America can equal those produced in Europe. This was never too much of a problem until the past few years, when European nations, especially France, taking advantage of the low tariff structure on wines, started depressing the market by constantly increasing shipments of wine into the U. S.

Now it is important to bear in mind that France is almost down in wine, while production of milk suffers. Yet, a French alcohol trust, which virtually dominates the French government, forces the French government to support the French wine industry.

Apparently, after rummaging around, State Dept. found it had not authority to stop Americans from putting forth the truth about their products. But they knew the fellows that could.

Thus, it is felt around Washington that it is a pretty sure bet that State Dept. conferred with ATU and out of these cozy little talks came this order.

And this is just but one of many, many incidents that is getting Congress more than a little irked with the State Dept.

But a lot of inferior French wine has and is being dumped on the American market done up in fancy packages and sold at ruinous low prices.

Out in California, the grape growers and wine makers, most of them small operators, decided to combat this by holding over the country wine tastings. Experts, and others, have given both the best of California wines and the best of foreign wines blind tastings.

In a majority of cases, the verdict has been in favor of California wines, sometimes by a ratio of 3 to 1.

But hardly had the first of these verdicts been rendered than the Alcohol Tax Unit, known as ATU, issued an edict that no domestic wine advertising could in any way make use of the results of these tests. In other words, these small California operators are forbidden by government fiat to make mention of the excellence of their products as compared to imports.

No one knows exactly just how the ATU came to issue such an order, but it is rumored around Washington that foreign interests first made some pretty strenuous protests to the State Dept.

Hay Production For Oregon Farms Up 7% This Year

Oregon crop prospects at mid-year are generally favorable but farmers throughout the nation may reap the smallest total crop harvest in six years, report Oregon State college agricultural economists.

Oregon farmers will probably follow the national trend this year toward less wheat and corn but a bumper barley crop. Fewer peaches, grapes, and prunes than last year are also expected in Oregon, but increases are in sight for most other field and fruit and nut crops, according to the USDA's July crop report.

Hay production in Oregon for 1957 is estimated at more than two million tons, up 7 percent from last year and 20 percent more than average. The state's barley production is forecast at a record high of 22½ million bushels, 5 percent larger than last year and nearly double the average harvest.

Present prospects are for a Bartlett pear crop about one-fourth above average, and fall and winter pears are estimated at nearly one-fifth above average. A sizeable crop increase is also expected in Oregon's late summer potatoes.

The generally good prospects for Oregon harvests are in contrast to the national picture. A combination of bad weather and Soil Bank acreage cutbacks has resulted in the smallest planted acreage in nearly 40 years, the economists report. The national crop output now looks to be about 7 percent below last year and the smallest since 1951.

Major crops planted last fall and this spring in important areas throughout the United States got off to a slow and unpromising start. Favorable weather for the rest of the growing season could change the picture but probably not enough to match last year's record tonnage.

Meanwhile, farm income supported by slightly higher farm prices and Soil Bank payments is holding up. Spending for food has been up about 5 percent, in line with a 5 percent increase in consumer income. About half the increase went to cover higher marketing charges with the other half going to farmers.
