

Heppner-Stanfield Game Friday Crucial

Friday night's grid game with Stanfield will probably prove to be the most important one of the season for Heppner's Mustangs, for it will probably decide which of the two teams will represent district 7B in the state playoffs.

Stanfield today holds the better season record of four wins against no losses in the Cayuse conference and three wins against no losses in the district. Heppner also holds a 3 and 0 record in the district, but does have one loss in its Cayuse conference record by virtue of its 20-19 defeat last Friday by Maupin.

Dopesters give Stanfield the edge over the Mustangs in their Friday night get-together on the rodeo field at 8 p.m., partially as a result of Stanfield's 39-0 overwhelming of Echo last Friday. Heppner however, has shown exceptional ability and has had little trouble downing its other opponents this season. The squad was minus the services of one entire side of its starting line for the Maupin game, due to flu and colds which undoubtedly played a big part in determining the final score.

The Heppner squad under the direction of Coach Jim Mallon has been pointing for Friday's contest and unless flu makes new inroads the team is expected to be at full strength.

Prior to the Friday night game, the chamber of commerce has made plans for a "quicky" noise parade to encourage the squad and advertise the game which will be the final home tussle of the season.

Special Session

The special session of the legislature called by Governor Robert D. Holmes for Oct. 28 convened on schedule Monday morning although a skirmish to unseat House Speaker Dooley threatened a delay. He was accused of brashness and it took a plea from the governor to quiet the raid.

It is a regular session to all appearances including lobbyists in full force.

Not as many hours of downtime as usual were consumed in getting the law-making machine going.

Whatever is done about the income tax surplus at the special session and which ever political party gets the spotlight for doing it, there most likely will be one or more initiative measures on the November 1958 special election ballot relating to income taxes and their disposal.

Tourist Figures

The Oregon Trouble and Information Department is a tighter fitting name for the state's tourist fetching department—just now.

A columnist's story from Washington, D. C. this week quoting Department of the Interior figures on tourist dollar returns of different states makes Oregon look like small potatoes.

Our tourist promotion agency claims the figures quoted (1951 to 1955) were not up to date, were not accumulated in a careful manner by some states and have the tang of chamber of commerce urge.

Oregon's method of tabulating tourists, as done by the Traffic Engineering Division of the Oregon Highway Department, are similar to those used by the widely recognized studies done yearly by the Curtis Publishing Company.

With some states the tourist count is comparable to letting a little boy make his own report card. If Oregon followed the pattern of some states we could count every commuter over the interstate bridge who works in Portland some making four trips a day, also the many customers who shop in Portland (even for groceries) to evade the Washington sales tax.

Oregon classifies a tourist as one who stays three or more days. According to William M. Tugman, Reedsport, chairman of the Advisory Committee of the state's tourist promotion agency Oregon has had a 92 percent increase in number of out-of-state visitors during the past 10 years.

James F. Short, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, made arrangements for Haarberg's Oregon trip, according to OSRC publicity director Wally Hunter.

Wayne Morse Honored

Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon will receive the 1957 Meritorious Service Award of the Jewish War Veterans organization at a banquet meeting at Utica, N. Y. Nov. 10.

Soil Bank Forestry Payments Possible Without Plantings

Oregon farmers who earmark marginal cropland for forest plantings under the Soil Bank program can receive payment for the conservation practice even though they are unable to get trees to make the planting this year.

Charles Ross, Oregon State college extension farm forestry specialist, says forest tree seedlings in Oregon are being rationed to stretch supplies among as many persons as possible. Even so, seedling supplies may run short of demand this fall.

A four to five-fold increase in seeding supplies is expected next year Ross advises farmers to sign up land now for the Soil Bank's conservation reserve program and receive rental payments until trees are available. Sign-up before April 1 will prevent any loss of eligibility.

The state forestry department, Salem, has reported 3 million young trees, mostly Douglas fir available from the Oregon state forest nursery this fall. An estimated 15 million or more seedlings will be available next fall following expansion of the nursery program to meet expected Soil Bank needs.

Meanwhile, the forestry department, OSC extension service and the U. S. forest service are cooperating with farmers to get as many plantings as possible started this year. County extension agents can advise farmers on getting technical assistance to help decide what to plant and how to plant, Ross says.

The Soil Bank pays $25 an acre toward costs of buying and planting trees plus annual rental payments of $8 to $14 an acre for land in the reserve program. Most lands in Oregon will be eligible for $13 an acre rental, the specialist says.

Ten-year contracts are required on tree plantings for forestry purposes. Either five or ten-year contracts are available, however, if plantings are for shelterbelts, windbreaks or wildlife habitats. Farmers with lands not eligible for the conservation reserve are advised to investigate possibilities of forest plantings under the agricultural conservation program.

Farm-City Banquet, Special Concert Slated by Chamber

Arrangements are being made this week by the chamber of commerce for two special events scheduled for late in November.

Tentatively set for Friday evening Nov. 22, will be a special benefit concert presented by the Pendleton's men's chorus. Proceeds from the event will go into the chamber's rodeo field lighting fund. The date has been reserved here and will probably hold unless there is a conflict with other dates on the chorus schedule.

On Monday night, Nov. 25, the chamber will sponsor its annual Farm-City week banquet which will be open to the public and held at the Heppner Legion hall. The program will be under the direction of the Heppner Soil Conservation district directors and will include presentations of awards to the Conservation Man of the Year and Grassman of the Year. Guest speaker at the banquet will be J. R. Beck, assistant director of the Oregon State college extension service.

This will be the second year the chamber has sponsored the Farmer-City banquet and the affair replaces another special meeting the group previously held at the Cutsforth cabin where the awards were presented. The chamber jointly sponsors the conservation award.

One senior and two junior girls have been named princesses and one will be crowned queen during the dance. The three are Judie Spaulding, Kay Keithley and Susie McQuarrie. APATHY AGAIN SLOWS DOWN OREGON SALK POLIO VACCINE PROGRAM

Almost 584,000 cc's of tax purchased Salk vaccine have been distributed locally in Oregon since initiation of the National Polio Vaccine Assistance act of 1955, the State Board of Health revealed this week.

The tax-purchased vaccine is restricted to persons up to the age of 20 and expectant mothers. Supplies have been available through private physicians, who may charge for the injection but not for the vaccine.

Although the program has officially ended throughout the United States, vaccine supplies on hand or on order are expected to keep the program rolling until sometime next year in many states.

Both the tax-purchased and commercial vaccination programs reportedly have been lagging badly in Oregon since late last spring, although numerous industries have recently scheduled mass clinics for workers. These adult vaccinations usually are performed by plant physicians utilizing vaccine made available by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Although Oregon has only recorded 35 cases of polio this year, compared with 115 for the same period last year and a six-year
