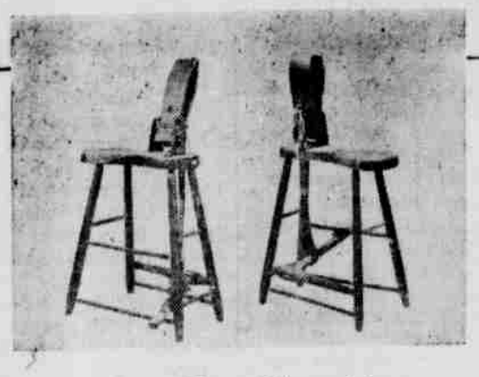
This Week's HISTORY MYSTERY



Can You Identify This Device?

CLUE: This historical apparatus was put to good use in the horse and buggy days. A few of them can still be found in use today.

ANSWER: It is a harnessmaker's horse and corresponds to the modern vise. The jaws clamp tightly by depressing the lever at the base and hold the leather while sewing is done. Leather workers who learned their trade long ago still use them. This particular harnessmaker's horse was presented to the Oregon Historical Society by Mrs. E. L. Krebs and was used in her husband's leather shop from 1914 to 1956.
