WASHINGTON AND "SMALL BUSINESS"

By C. WILSON HARDER

Along about 1933 it became fashionable in Washington to bring college professors into government, either on the payroll, or as advisors. This continues.

Thus, there has long been a question as to what extent this fad has harmed the nation. Of course, any criticism of this practice usually results in loud clamors of "anti-intellectualism." Seemingly, anyone who wants to match practical economic experience with the tenets of classroom theory is considered as rather uncouth intellectually.

And while even such an institution as the highly touted Harvard School of Business has turned out some outstanding business leaders, these shining examples are undoubtedly far outweighed by those who achieved only mediocre success, or even turned out downright flops.

And it must not be forgotten that it was largely college professors who set up years ago the basis for the present inflation; for much of the present unrealistic tax policies.

A case in point occurred recently in Los Angeles when the Senate Small Business Committee held one of its current series of meetings on how taxation is affecting small business.

Witness after witness, astute business operators, told the committee which was represented among others by Sen. Hubert Humphrey, (Minn.), Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, (Calif.) and Sen. Barry Goldwater, (Arizona), that present federal tax structures are making it difficult for small business to get working capital that is available to huge con-

SEW IT'S FUN

The Sew It's Fun sewing club held our first meeting Friday, in the home economics room at school, with our leader, Mrs. C. E. Brenner.

We elected officers as follows: president, Mary Jo Morrison; vice president, Michele Morrison; secretary, Cheryl Morrison; news reporter, Sandra Eubanks, and song leader, Sherry Corley.

The refreshments were furnished by Sandra Eubanks. We cerns who float stock issues, or in other ways, raise funds.

In order to permit small business to finance itself out of earnings, it was brought forth that the present jump of tax rates from 30% to 52% when earnings pass $25,000 is unrealistic. It was proposed that instead a graduated system be set up.

But Dean L. C. Lockley of the Southern California School of Commerce, present, for some strange reason jumped in with both feet in opposition.

Said the Dean "The cause of any difficulty is not in the nature of smallness of business but in the lack of knowledge of small businessmen. If we can work to increase the economic and commercial knowledge of the small businessman, his problems will very probably be solved."

On this basis, he opposed any tax relief for small business. While the Dean's practical experience is not known, it could be possible his actual experience in securing capital has been confined to buying a car on installments, or making a personal loan secured by his salary.

Of course, it may be possible that Dean was propagandizing for huge Federal grants for cushy jobs for underpaid professors on government payroll turning out pamphlets telling small businessmen how to do business.

Yet, if this were his purpose, it seems a shame that all of the Dean's great knowledge of business is so wasted. If he is so sure of himself, there is wonder why he doesn't go into business and make a fortune for himself. At one time in Washington there was a "Brain Trust" that raised a lot of havoc with pretty coarsure demeanor, yet in the years intervening since this group went out of power, there appears no great evidence that any of them became great business leaders.

have taken the first year sewing class, "Just So Girls" in with us, so now we have 19 members.
