Orange Flavor Puts Spring Into Winter Meals

Oranges are a good buy this month. Fruit stands everywhere are bright with their color. And what fragrance and fresh flavor this golden fruit can bring to winter-time menus!

While oranges are in good supply, treat your family to the very special dessert shown here. Orange Charlotte, it's called, and one taste of this light, refreshing dessert will make you feel that Spring cannot be far away.

This recipe is one that weight-watchers in the family will especially appreciate. Calories have been substantially reduced by the use of the non-caloric sweetener, Sucaryl, rather than sugar. Just by using this sweetener, calories have been trimmed from 175 to only 47 calories per serving. Best part is, even though there's not one grain of sugar in this dessert, still it's sweet enough to satisfy the sweetest tooth. Try it soon and see if you don't agree.

Orange Charlotte

- 4 teaspoons gelatin
- 1/2 cup cold water
- 1 1/2 cups boiling water
- 4 teaspoons Sucaryl solution or 32 Sucaryl tablets
- 1/4 cup lemon juice
- 1 cup orange juice
- 3 egg whites, beaten stiff
- 1 medium orange, sectioned

Soften gelatin in cold water; dissolve in boiling water. Add Sucaryl, lemon juice and orange juice, stirring well. Chill until mixture is almost set; then beat until light and frothy. Fold into the stiffly beaten egg whites. Place orange sections in the bottom of a 4-cup ring mold. Carefully pour in the gelatin mixture and refrigerate until firm. Unmold and serve plain, or fill center of ring with low-calorie whipped topping, below.

Makes 6 servings. Each serving contains 47 CALORIES; 4.2 grams protein; 0.1 gram fat; 8.3 grams carbohydrate. If made with sugar, each serving would contain 175 CALORIES.

To make 1 cup of Low-Calorie Whipped Topping, combine 1/4 cup nonfat dry milk, 1/4 cup ice water and 1/2 teaspoon Sucaryl solution (or 4 Sucaryl tablets, crushed). Beat on high speed of mixer until of consistency of whipped cream. This topping contains just 7 calories per tablespoonful.

Hormone Treatments Do Not Alter Beef Quality, OSC Finds

Beef loses none of its good eating qualities when animal weight gains are boosted with recommended dosages of stilbestrol hormone, according to an Oregon State college agricultural experiment station research team.

Twelve trained "taste testers" in the OSC food and dairy technology department found it impossible to detect differences between cooked standing-rib roasts from stilbestrol-treated and untreated young beef steers.

Mrs Lois Sather and A F Anglemier, OSC food technologists, and David C England, animal husbandman, headed up the research project, using more than 90 young steers in their tests. The steers were kept for a 247-day feeding period, about the maximum time used in commercial operations to finish young steers for slaughter.

The feed ration was primarily peavine silage, with barley and mill feed as the grain, small amounts of beet pulp, and five per cent molasses. Some of the steers received an average of 4 1/2 pounds of grain a day, with others averaging as high as 8 1/2 pounds a day over the entire feeding period.

In the test, stilbestrol pellets implanted in the ears of some of the animals ranged up to 60 milligrams for comparisons with non-treated animals on the same feed ration. This high level, used to insure a rigid test of meat quality, is about double the recommended dosage for young beef steers.

Even with older animals, a 30 to 45 milligram implant of stilbestrol gives maximum gain boosts of one-third to one-half pound a day under most feeding conditions, England said.

Taste testers who gave the stilbestrol treatment the go-ahead sign scored the beef roasts for flavor, tenderness, juiciness, texture, and aroma. The researchers also found no differences between treated and untreated beef in cooking "shrinkage" or in cooking time required per pound of meat.
